Donald J. Trump (212) 832-2000

New York, June 13, 2000 — Donald J. Trump and Nicholas L. Ribis today confirmed that they have mutually agreed to end their formal, professional relationship. The announcement comes at the conclusion of the second five year contract between Mr. Ribis and Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts, Inc.

Mr. Trump commented, "Nick Ribis has worked closely with me since the early 1990's and the evolution of our gaming company into a publicly-owned entity. Given my desire to play a greater role in the Company's day-to-day activities, I can understand Nick's decision to pursue other opportunities at the chief executive officer level."

Mr. Ribis said that the time was right for a career change. "Donald's New York City real estate business has reached an unparalleled level and he, appropriately, wants to focus on Atlantic City, his other principal activity. While Donald and I have been a team for many years, there is only room for one decision-maker in any organization. I respect Donald's decision to focus on Atlantic City and wish him well."

Mr. Ribis' tenure with Trump includes 14 years as an outside attorney and 10 years as Chief Executive of first The Trump Organization and later Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts, Inc.. Mr. Ribis has entered into a one-year agreement to work on special projects for The Trump Organization.

From a political and military standpoint, the Trump defense plan parallels the goals and objectives of President Reagan's military push. And with McCain's more aggressive plan aligned on the same premise of modernizing and improving the readiness of the US military, Trump will likely have the backing of this influential member of the Republican congressional leadership.

Today's Economic Backdrop—Similar to the 1960s

The economic and financial implications of a large, multiyear defense-spending plan must be weighed against the economic environment at the time of implementation. And from a historical context, today's conditions have more similarities to the economic setting of the mid-1960s than during the defense buildups of the early 1980s or early 2000s, which were either in recession or the very early stages of recovery.

In contrast, the US economy in the mid-1960s was already in its fifth year of expansion, the jobless rate of 4.5% was relatively low and inflation was tame (roughly 1.5%). Nonetheless, the extra defense spending boosted domestic demand growth and added significant pressure to labor costs, materials and supplies, and product prices. So much so that the acceleration in consumer price inflation (from 1% in 1961 to near 6% in 1970) from the start to the end of that business cycle was one of the largest of any economic growth cycle during the postwar period.

Today's economic backdrop looks similar in many ways. The economy has been in recovery for seven years, the jobless rate is in the mid-4% range and inflation is stable (at around 2%). While many domestic and global factors are different now, we would still expect a large multiyear defense-spending program to add to growth and put upward pressure on labor costs and inflation in the coming years. Keep in mind that we're coming off the weakest five-year defense spending trend in the past 50 years, so Trump's defense spending need not match any of the prior three to have a major impact.

Stay tuned for the unveiling of Trump's budget and pay close attention to the defense spending request. A large multi-year program would definitely lift inflationary pressures. While we wouldn't expect an acceleration like that in the 1960s, a sustained rise of 100 to 200 basis points in general inflation would still seem reasonable—and far above what the Federal Reserve and financial markets are currently expecting. ■

There are mounting fundamental reasons to question the 3Q18 earnings prospects of FAANG, from the accelerating user backlash against Facebook to Apple's trade war exposure to Amazon's rapidly-intensifying workforce revolt that could see the e-commerce giant left with no option but to raise wages and improve workplace conditions for its warehouse and Whole Foods employees.

However, as Apabhai suggests, the message BAT is sending is less about earnings, and more about the cost of exuberance. And FAANG exuberance faces threats that go beyond fundamentals. A flurry of regulatory announcements last week signaled the political tide has turned in the U.S. Across every branch of government, the message was consistent: the U.S. no longer trusts tech giants to self-police. And the public agrees—according to a Gallup poll last month, 79% of Americans now believe "tech companies should be regulated the same way the news media is."

Regardless of political will, threats may not turn to action in the near term. Nonetheless, FAANG appears increasingly vulnerable to a decisive sentiment shift. At some point, the relentless barrage of bad news will force investors to begin pricing in regulatory risks. Any sustained stumble by FAANG's leadership could cripple exuberance, and cause an unraveling of passive and algorithmic strategies that are heavily overweight tech (see WILTW April 7, 2018 for more). We will continue to watch closely to estimate timing, but given BAT's collapse, today more than ever, acute scrutiny of tech giant leadership is required.

Through August 28, Amazon, Apple and Microsoft had accounted for greater than 35% of the S&P 500's total return this year, according to S&P Dow Jones Indices data. It took Amazon just 165 trading days to grow its market value from $600 billion in January to $1 trillion. The combined market cap of FAAMG (Facebook, Apple, Amazon, Microsoft, and Google) now sits over $4 trillion, or roughly equal to the combined market cap of the 283 smallest S&P 500 members.

Tech's continued market leadership means investors have largely discounted the mounting risks tech giants face. We have been warning about the downsides of tech giant monopolism for more than two years in these pages, from surveillance/data security concerns to anticompetitive behavior and their role in escalating inequality. For the political establishment, for the media, for the public, this year has seen a broad awakening—the Cambridge Analytica scandal, the backlash against Jeff Bezos' astonishing wealth, and tech's ever-skyrocketing market caps were all warning signs. The past month signals a new phase has begun: from a distant rumbling of change to preparation for action.

The number of significant tech-related regulatory developments that have emerged from the U.S. and the E.U. in recent weeks is nothing short of staggering. Here is an abbreviated list:

The number of significant tech-related regulatory developments that have emerged from the U.S. and the E.U. in recent weeks is nothing short of staggering. Here is an abbreviated list:

The Trump administration's friendly and intensive contacts with the Orban government represent a radical departure: It watches idly as Orban dismantles his nation's democratic institutions. For instance, the pro-government weekly Figyelo recently issued an enemies list of about 200 prominent opposition individuals. Most were local civil society advocates, but the list also included U.S. citizens, many of them scholars of economics, Judaism and nationalism at the Soros-funded Central European University (such as Leon Botstein and Allen Feldman). The government has erected contrived legal barriers in an effort to close the institution, a graduate school devoted to liberal values and based in Budapest. Meanwhile, Hungary harassed the U.S.-based Open Society Foundations until they decided to move their operations from Budapest to Berlin. Two Hungarian newspapers, Magyar Nemzet and Budapest Beacon , shut down this spring as advertisers vanished because of their opposition to the Hungarian government, leaving only one print opposition daily.

The State Department and the U.S. Embassy in Budapest have remained almost entirely silent about all of this. The compliant new U.S. approach was initially discussed at a Dec. 18, 2017, meeting of the National Security Council's policy coordinating committee led by Fiona Hill, the council's senior director for European and Russian affairs, and Assistant Secretary Mitchell, according to two sources familiar with the proceedings. They concluded that previous efforts under the Bush administration, and especially the Obama administration, had not paid off, so it was time to try something else.

Accordingly, the first high-level meeting between the two sides took place at the White House on May 15, when John Bolton, Trump's national security adviser, received Jeno Megyesy, Orban's chief adviser on the United States. (Megyesy was also the official point of contact for then-Trump aide Carter Page's meetings in Budapest during the campaign.) This coming week, Foreign Minister Peter Szijjarto is scheduled to meet Secretary of State Mike Pompeo; although Szijjarto has visited Washington an eye-popping seven times in the past 18 months, this will be the first such high-level bilateral meeting since 2012. The only step left would be for Trump to receive Orban — the first European head of government to endorse Trump over Hillary Clinton and congratulate him on his victory — at the White House.

What, if anything, is the United States getting from Hungary for this appeasement? The $12 billion Russian-financed and secretly signed Russian Paks II nuclear plant in southern Hungary is one reflection of Orban's Russian orientation. (Orban previously welcomed energy investments from the now-failed Russian South Stream pipeline.) Hungary spends only 1 percent of its gross domestic product on defense, among the lowest levels for NATO members, despite Trump's insistence that nations step up their payments. (Budapest said last year that it would increase spending, but it has said this many times before.)

Many intelligent Hungarians — watching the complicity, or at least inaction, of the U.S. government — do not understand what is happening, they tell us. They know that Trump wants to be different from Barack Obama, including in his approach to Hungary. But they search in vain for logic in Trump's posture. For those who still believe in the merits of a Western-style democracy there, which is a large majority in Budapest and a large minority in the countryside, the policy of appeasement signifies abandonment. They would like Washington to keep hope alive. People who suffer from, or are ashamed by, the government's anti-Semitic discourse and attacks on liberal norms long for a different America.

And there may be one. David Cornstein, the new U.S. ambassador to Hungary, who will arrive in Budapest in a few weeks, might make a difference. In his appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in early May, he spoke eloquently about promoting American values. He promised to fight against anti-Semitism, not just in Hungary but elsewhere in Europe, too. His nice, old-fashioned remarks were even cleared by the State Department and the U.S. Embassy in Budapest. He received strong expressions of support from Republican and Democratic senators, including Sen. Benjamin Cardin (D-Md.), who is something of an expert on Hungarian politics. There is still hope, then, that decent, humane values will be heard by Hungarians who, in search of answers, continue to look to the United States.

TILLERSON OUSTED AS TRUMP SILENCES DISSENT IN CABINET

ORK TIMES

Pick for C.I.A. Chief Ran Secret Prison

By ADAM GOLDMAN

WASHINGTON — Just over a year after the Sept. 11 attacks, the C.I.A. dispatched the veteran clandestine officer Gina Haspel to oversee a secret prison in Thailand. Shortly after, agency contractors in the frantic hunt for the conspirators waterboarded a Qaeda suspect three times and subjected him to brutal interrogation techniques.

Ms. Haspel's time running the prison, code-named Cat's Eye, began her deep involvement in the agency's counterterrorism operations and showed her willingness to take part in the agency's rendition, detention and interrogation program, which shaped her career. She was a rising star until that dark chapter in C.I.A. history began to emerge publicly.

But under President Trump, her fortunes changed, and on Tuesday, he announced that he intended to name her director of the C.I.A.

With his elevation of Ms. Haspel, now

Pompeo Is Chosen to Lead State Dept.

This article is by Mark Landler, Maggie Haberman and Gardiner Harris.

WASHINGTON — President Trump ousted his secretary of state, Rex W. Tillerson, on Tuesday, the most dramatic in a cascade of personnel moves that suggest Mr. Trump is determined to surround himself with loyalists more willing to reflect his "America First" views.

Mr. Trump announced he would replace Mr. Tillerson with Mike Pompeo, the C.I.A. director and former Tea Party congressman, who has cultivated a close relationship with the president and has taken a harder line than Mr. Tillerson on critical issues like Iran and North Korea.

Mr. Tillerson's dismissal, on the heels of Gary D. Cohn's resignation as Mr. Trump's chief economic adviser after a dispute ove steel tariffs, pulls the Trump ad ministration further out of the ec nomic and foreign policy mai stream and closer to the nation ist ideas that animated Trump's 2016 presidential c paign.

It also suggests that after a of chaotic on-the-job training Trump has developed more

In the winter, when the well-to-do from all over the Northeast visit Florida for charity balls, the board hosts dinners and parties for prospective relocators and local captains of industry. Last year, Smallridge and company sponsored a soiree aboard a $70 million yacht that featured Veuve Clicquot, caviar and live jazz. Guests—who included the CEOs of a national IT company, a major finance company and a land developer, venture capitalists, hedge fund managers and the creator of Goldman Sachs' prime brokerage division—took private tours with the captain of the yacht.

Smallridge is also working with former hedge fund CIO Dr. Rainford Knight to develop a club for local investment managers called SocialAlpha that encourages bankers in Palm Beach County's ritzy social scene to get to know each other. Even Florida governor Rick Scott has gotten involved, sending personal letters to friends and prospects from the Northeast (the governor is a former Greenwich resident and businessman) to convince them of Florida's merits.

Smallridge and Governor Scott are hoping to induce a snowball effect, and so far, it seems to be working. Every financier who moves south chips away at the primary reason to remain near New York City—the fact that everyone else is there. That's not to say it's been easy. Florida is still Florida, and popular opinion has not been kind. Even Palm Beach, which has for the most part dodged the insults hurled at the rest of the state, is known for its residents' apocalyptically bad driving and worse Hawaiian shirts.

"There was a fair amount of trepidation," says Al Rabil III, managing partner and CEO of Kayne Anderson Real Estate Advisors, who made the move from Armonk, New York, with 20 coworkers this summer. "But once everybody got past the stereotypes and actually came and looked, that changed." He says most of his employees weren't looking for bottle service and models anyway. The majority of those who have reached the upper echelons of financial management are married with children, and the appeal of a semi-tropical paradise with luxury restaurants, year-round recreation, and sophisticated socializing in a community far more tight-knit than Manhattan (yes, that'sDonald Trump over there) is not lost on them.

Porter's tour of Billionaire's Row was part of a modified version of one of the Business Development Board's red-carpet tours that I took as part of researching this story. I ate breakfast at the clubby Top of the Point restaurant with some of the area's prominent financiers. A waiter in a captain's outfit served lobster rolls while a CPA, a lawyer and the executive

However, the ways in which sociopaths differ from psychopaths is key to understanding their evolutionary utility. For example, psychopaths are more likely than the general public to be violent and to end up incarcerated. Narcissistic sociopaths, on the other hand, are usually nonviolent and happy to work within a system of laws and norms, insofar as it suits their goals, because, while they do not hesitate to harm others, it isn't a specific aim. Instead, they are highly motivated toward the accumulation of riches and influence; whereas psychopaths are often motivated toward sadistic self-gratification and generally do not seek positions of power and wealth per se. (There is some crossover between these phenotypes and sociopaths who do find gratification in hurting others are labeled malignant sociopaths.) Finally, narcissistic sociopaths always seek reproductive success through procreation and aggressive nepotism, which is usually accompanied by extreme in-group identification, e.g., racism, xenophobia, and nationalism, while psychopaths show no allegiance to family, community, or country.

Therefore, the phenotype of the narcissistic sociopath is not a bizarre combination of traits, but rather a set of highly attuned social skills and behaviors aimed at increasing long-term biological fitness through wealth, status, power, and the future success of progeny. In order words, sociopaths are highly adapted. The evolutionary puzzle is not found in the phenotype itself but rather in the interaction of sociopaths with the society in which they exist. Social groups can detect dishonest and manipulative behaviors and act to punish the actors in order to either correct the antisocial behavior or remove them from the group. Dozens of mammal species have shown this very sophisticated and elastic social behavior, but humans and our close relatives are especially apt at detecting and punishing cheaters, freeloaders, and liars.

This sets up both a short-term conflict and long-term evolutionary battle between manipulative narcissistic sociopaths and the rest of society, that is, those who do not wish to be manipulated. Most individuals in a society share a vested interest in maintaining fairness and social order. The equilibrium point is reached through a concept called frequency-dependent selection, the essence of which is that phenotypes can sometimes have distinct advantages precisely because they are rare. Under this paradigm, the infrequency of sociopaths in a population is essential to their success.

Current estimates place the prevalence of narcissistic sociopathy at 1-2% and scholars have held that this rate appears stable across societies and over recorded history (insofar as such a phenotype and its frequency can be inferred from historical sources). This makes sociopathy a candidate phenotype for frequency-dependent selection, especially given how successful they often are. The rarity of narcissistic sociopaths in the population, along with their considerable skill in hiding their true motivations, makes them very difficult to detect. If they were more numerous, however, members of society would become familiar with this particular pattern of social deviance and quickly learn to neutralize it. Furthermore, when narcissists encounter one another, while they may be willing to cooperate with each

Donald Trump says he has foreign policy experience because he ran the Miss Universe pageant in Russia

Clinton attacks Trump's foreign policy as 'dangerously incoherent' 1 / 27U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton lambasted Donald Trump's foreign policy platform as "dangerously incoherent" in a speech on Thursday that cast her Republican rival as both a dangerous and laughable figure.
A former U.S. secretary of state, Clinton attacked Trump for his policies and his character, suggesting Trump might start a nuclear war if elected to the White House simply because "someone got under his very thin skin."
"Donald Trump's ideas are not just different, they are dangerously incoherent," she said to a room of supporters in San Diego, California. "They're not even really ideas, just a series of bizarre rants, personal feuds and outright lies."

© Mike Blake U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton delivers a speech on national security in San Diego, California, United States June 2, 2016.
Clinton, the front-runner in the race to become the Democratic presidential nominee, delivered her speech as she seeks to shift her attention to the Nov. 8 election against likely rival Trump and away from Bernie Sanders, a U.S. senator from Vermont, who is continuing his longshot bid for the nomination.
Trump, the Republicans' presumptive nominee, has said he would sit down with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un to try to stop Pyongyang's nuclear program and has criticized the decades-old NATO alliance with mainly European nations as obsolete and too costly for the United States.
Clinton derided these and other positions, promising she would do a better job keeping the United States safe and standing in front of a backdrop of 19 large U.S. flags, an unusual abundance even by the standards of presidential campaign events.
Trump, a billionaire businessman who has never held elected office or worked in government before, says he has experience dealing with foreign governments through setting up hotels, resorts, golf courses and beauty pageants in foreign countries. Clinton, who is also a former U.S. senator and former first lady, mocked this.
"He says he has foreign policy experience because he ran the Miss Universe pageant in Russia," she said to loud laughter.
Trump has talked tough on foreign policy. He has said he would bring back waterboarding and other brutal interrogation techniques for terrorism suspects that are widely regarded as torture and were discontinued by Democratic President Barack Obama.
He has also vowed to renegotiate trade deals, called for a temporary ban on Muslims entering the country, and said he would ask members of the 28-nation NATO alliance to "pay up" or "get out."
Trump has criticized Clinton for her handling of foreign policy during her 2009-2013 stint as foreign secretary, including the Sept. 11, 2012, attack by Islamist militants on a U.S. diplomatic facility in Benghazi, Libya, that killed the U.S. ambassador and three other Americans.
He cites Clinton's support for the Iraq war - launched by former Republican President George W. Bush - as another example of her shortcomings.
At a rally Wednesday night in Sacramento, California, Trump said he had seen a copy of Clinton's speech and "it was such lies about my foreign policy."

Florida when this happens, he’s much less likely to pay exorbitant state taxes on the whole amount. If he still lived in New York City? Fuggedaboudit.

It’s the job of Kelly Smallridge, president and CEO of the Palm Beach Business Development Board, to ensure that hedge fund and private equity managers are informed of these benefits, in the hopes that they, and their firms, will become Palm Beach County’s newest residents. She’s developed a red-carpet tour that goes beyond looking at office space and real estate to include meeting headmasters at private schools, the school-district superintendent and the mayor and speaking with the governor’s staff and CEOs who have moved their operations here. Plus, of course, a few nights on the town.

In the winter, when the well-to-do from all over the Northeast visit Florida for charity balls, the board hosts dinners and parties for prospective relocators and local captains of industry. Last year, Smallridge and company sponsored a soiree aboard a $70 million yacht that featured Veuve Clicquot, caviar and live jazz. Porter’s tour of Billionaire’s Row was part of a modified version of one of the Business Development Board’s red-carpet tours that I took as part of researching this story. I ate breakfast at the clubby Top of the Point restaurant with some of the area’s prominent financiers. A waiter in a captain’s outfit served lobster rolls while a CPA, a lawyer and the executive director of the Palm Beach County Education Commission touted the area’s benefits. I surveyed real estate and office space surrounded by miles of water without once having my foot stepped on by a tourist. You can see how all this might sway someone who’s on the fence.

Exploring the sugary beaches of South Florida, one starts to wonder why Wall Streeters would be on the fence at all. Between the smiling locals and the shopping on Worth Avenue, the Hiaasen-esque stereotypes recede. What remains are the facts: Take-home pay is higher, commutes are shorter, and it’s just as fabulous as Manhattan, at least for four months of the year. Meanwhile, no one in Florida even owns an ice scraper. With the Internet allowing more and more money managers to perform their work from nearly anywhere, there are few reasons not to make the move.

“Initially, it was a way to play golf and keep the wife and kids happy,” says Brett Langbert, managing director and head of sales at I.A. Englander & Co. “But once we moved down, it became a quality-of-life issue. There are unlimited things the kids can do outside. I have to tell you, my wife and I are so happy we haven’t had to go to one of those indoor bouncy-castle places since we got here.”

In the years after the First World War, until the end of the Second World War, three political models for shaping the future of nation states emerged; Fascism, Communism and liberal democracy. These all offered great ideas for the future of the world. Fascism and Communism shared some common features: authoritarian, strong leaders and a belief that their revolutions had to be carried through with violence. This led to the mass murders in the Nazi concentration camps and in the Soviet Gulags.

In the mid war periods, the "Litfass columns" that were originally designed to carry advertising, became the outdoor galleries for the war of ideologies. The political poster was born. High quality posters from every political party in Germany popped up on the columns. Hitler's propaganda chief Göebels stated that the Nazi election campaign should be run through speeches and posters. The other parties responded in kind. An art form thus became an essential political tool in the battle for votes. The propagandist Art used by the Nazis and communists alike was essential in helping sell their message to the masses. Indeed, much of the art that was critical of these movements was suppressed or censored and "subversive" artists cowed, in some cases imprisoned or even worse.

The liberal democratic model departed sharply from these authoritarian perspectives by presenting the alternative of free and transparent elections, the rule of law and freedom of speech. In the mid-war period the three narratives were competing to be the conceptual frame for society. After the Second World War fascism was crushed leaving the two competing ideologies of communism and liberal democracy. After the demise of communism in 1989, through to the late 1990's, liberal democracy was victorious in the idealogical battlefield. Some historians, like Francis Fukuyama, went so far as to proclaim this period as "the end of history".

A key piece of art that championed this kind of ideology was Sheppard Fairey's campaign poster for Barack Obama. In this poster, Fairey, a well established graffiti artist uses urban colours and stencilling techniques combined with the message "HOPE" to promote the incoming presidents positive values and popularity with the young. It is notable that Fairey's most recent political poster protests the Trump presidency rather than promote it.

With the rise of so called "illiberal democracy", with strong parties standing for populist ideologies, we have now moved into what can be described as the age of bewilderment. We were not in fact at the "end of history". Once again the future looks unpredictable and insecure and artists are responding in different ways.

Jeremy Deller, a British Turner prize winning artist created a work which features a car damaged in the bombing of the historic Mutanabbi Street book market, which resulted in the deaths of 38 people. Here, an art work has been used to show the aftermath of an event. This event was the result of the Iraq war, which was seen as a way to spread democracy. Here Art is used as a means by which to explore the effects of ideology rather than promote it, another really interesting area in the study of the intersections between ideology and art.

Exploring how art reflects the historical and ideological contexts of the world around it is fascinating to me and I would love to study these ideas in more depth at undergraduate level.

money pours out of the Northeast (and in some cases, from as far as London and Singapore) and into this already wealthy section of southeast Florida. Approximately 70 hedge and private equity funds are now headquartered here, many of which have set up shop in the last two years, jacking up home prices and spurring a countywide initiative to become, as some have said, "the new Greenwich."

For hedge fund managers who might normally be inclined toward Westchester or Connecticut, the allure of South Florida is as plain as grits on toast. The homes are sprawling; the Intracoastal Waterway is a yachter's paradise. It has a glittering social scene. During high season—October through March—there might be several fundraisers on any given night. Perhaps the key factor, however: In Florida, there are no individual income taxes, no estate taxes and no capital gains taxes. A hedge fund manager reporting $1 million in income can expect to pay only the federal government, whereas his counterpart living in Connecticut pays that plus an extra $67,000. And if the poor schmuck were still in New York City? He'd better be ready to fork over $104,300.

As for why all of this is happening now, when Florida has long been a sunny tax haven, so to speak, financiers point to the upcoming application of Section 457A of the Internal Revenue Code. Before 457A was enacted, certain fees and related earnings could grow tax deferred in offshore accounts for up to ten years. But now, according to the section, hedge fund managers will need to funnel all of the fees that were deferred before 2009 and their related earnings back into the U.S. by 2017. If a manager lives in Florida when this happens, he's much less likely to pay exorbitant state taxes on the whole amount. If he still lived in New York City? Fuggedaboudit.

Then there's Apple. The trade war combined with China's slowing economy present a significant short-term threat to the company's profits. As we note in section 1, smartphone handset sales in China in August were reported at 32.6 million units, a decline of 20.9% year-over-year and 11.8% month-on-month. Moreover, no firm could suffer more if China decides to target tech supply chains in retaliation to Trump's tariffs.

Yet, the risks extend beyond Asia. On Wednesday, Apple announced its newest generation of iPhones. It is following the same strategy as last year, releasing ever-more expensive phones as it tries to keep profit growth on pace despite a largely-matured smartphone market. As The Wall Street Journal reported this week, projections suggest last year's $1,000 iPhone X underperformed previous launches: "Even for Apple and its devoted fans, the art of the upsell appears to have some limits...Analysts believe the iPhone X has accounted for about 30% of iPhone unit sales in the recent nine-month period...That is below the share the company's newest models typically get in a given cycle." Will a $1,200 iPhone cross the limits of what the market will tolerate?

We have roughly a month until 3Q18 earnings season begins. For years, big tech's remarkable profit trajectory has generated an air of invincibility. BAT's earnings miss combined with Facebook's earnings miss has cracked that expectation. As news reports of regulatory threats continue to flood in and as tech giant profit doubts mount, the weeks to come could see that crack turn to a fissure.

Moreover, no firm could suffer more if China decides to target tech supply chains in retaliation to Trump's tariffs.

Yet, the risks extend beyond Asia. On Wednesday, Apple announced its newest generation of iPhones. It is following the same strategy as last year, releasing ever-more expensive phones as it tries to keep profit growth on pace despite a largely-matured smartphone market. As The Wall Street Journal reported this week, projections suggest last year's $1,000 iPhone X underperformed previous launches: "Even for Apple and its devoted fans, the art of the upsell appears to have some limits...Analysts believe the iPhone X has accounted for about 30% of iPhone unit sales in the recent nine-month

Essay 1.

Coming from an international background, and having lived in Oslo, Tel Aviv, New York and London by the age of eighteen, I believe that the international profile of NYU will provide the best environment for my college education, with the added benefit of returning to the place where I've spent most of my childhood and where my mother will be posted as Norwegian Ambassador to the UN in January 2019.

NYU's Art History department appeals to me because of its wide range of courses, from the global art of antiquity to the contemporary. My passion is the Italian Renaissance and the rich history behind it, especially the works of 15th century masters such as Masaccio and Bellini. Some of the courses that NYU offers such as "Early masters of Italian Renaissance painting" and "Florentine Villas: An Interpretation Based on Historical, Social Factors" are, therefore appealing to me. What I find exciting, is not only the visual aesthetics and analysis of these masterpieces, but also the manner in which the Renaissance emphasised scientific and economic innovation, areas of study the Global Liberal Arts programme would offer. NYU's unique campus in Florence would give me a once in lifetime opportunity to spend a year immersing myself in the art, culture and history of Italy. This would be an exciting experience to have while studying for a Bachelor's degree in Art History, and would compliment my main interests in the subject.

As one of the prime cultural centres in the world, NYU's location in NYC is the perfect place to broaden knowledge within contemporary art. I am very much looking forward to visiting the Whitney Biennia this May. In addition the New museum, which shows a lot of the kind of work I find interesting is a short walk away from campus.

Taking advantage of being based in central London for the past year, I have completed the Chairman's Programme at Christies, work experience at the Courtauld Gallery and I will be working at Maddox Gallery in the near future. Similarly, I want to take advantage of being based in NYC to gain as much experience as possible. I have chosen to apply Early Decision to NYU as it is the only American university I will be applying to, as there is no better place to obtain experience of the contemporary art world than New York City.

Essay 2.

From the age of extremes to the age of bewilderment

What captivates me more than anything else is the different ideological phases of the 20th century and how art can be used as a tool of advancement and reflection on ideological and political developments.

My fascination began when I read; Eric Hobsbawm's "Age Of Extremes" and has since developed through books such as Benjamin Carter Hett's "The Death Of Democracy" and Yuval Harari "A Brief History Of Tomorrow" and "21 Lessons For The 21st Century".

In the years after the First World War, until the end of the Second World War, three political models for shaping the future of nation states emerged; Fascism, Communism and liberal democracy. These all offered great ideas for the future of the world. Fascism and Communism shared some common features: authoritarian, strong leaders and a belief that their revolutions had to be carried through with violence. This led to the mass murders in the Nazi concentration camps and in the Soviet Gulags.

In the mid war periods, the "Litfass columns" that were originally designed to carry advertising, became the outdoor galleries for the war of ideologies. The political poster was born. High quality posters from every political party in Germany popped up on the columns. Hitler's propaganda chief Göebels stated that the Nazi election campaign should be run through speeches and posters. The other parties responded in kind. An art form thus became an essential political tool in the battle for votes. The propagandist Art used by the Nazis and communists alike was essential in helping sell their message to the masses.

Does Trump Fit the Evolutionary Role of Narcissistic Sociopath?

Nathan H. Lents and Robert Trivers

There is no shortage of published psychological profiles of Donald J. Trump that attempt to diagnose him, from a distance, as either a psychopath or a narcissistic sociopath. These profiles, of course, are fatally hindered by the lack of access to Mr. Trump for personal examination and completion of personality inventories. However, exploration of the evolutionary features of these very peculiar personality types may provide insight into this important question.

Psychopaths are indeed an evolutionary conundrum because their particular behaviors are not an obvious path toward evolutionary success. For example, the majority of serial killers are childless when they are killed or apprehended. Narcissistic sociopaths, however, invariably [typically] have families and children whom they support energetically, and many of the traits specific to this phenotype can fairly be called adaptive. This raises the important issue of the evolutionary niche of a narcissistic sociopath within the societies in which they exist.

The psychological profile of narcissistic sociopathy is generally agreed upon and shares many features with psychopaths including above average intelligence, considerable social savvy, adaptability, likeability, and natural skills in the manipulation of others. They are charming, outgoing, and often feign interest in people and subjects and can convincingly fake both sympathy and conscience. If they engage in charitable acts at all, they are only in pursuit of ancillary selfish benefits. They learn well from past experiences, and show no dedication to a set of moral values, religious beliefs, truth, transparency. If they admire anyone, it is other sociopaths that they wish to emulate. Finally, they are effective liars and show a chilling unconcern for the welfare of others.

There is one particular skill that is common to both psychopaths and narcissistic sociopaths and absolutely essential to their nature: cognitive empathy. Emotional empathy, sometimes called emotional contagion, is regarded as the ability and tendency to closely identify with the emotional experience of others, even “catching” their emotions to a degree. Cognitive empathy is quite different. This is a mental skill involving the close observation and interpretation of the actions and emotions of others in order to understand and predict their behavior. It is morally neutral and common in high-functioning individuals across the moral and ethical spectrum. While social workers and therapists use cognitive empathy to help individuals improve their lives, psychopaths and sociopaths use this skill to manipulate, coerce, and deceive others in order to achieve their own ends. While emotional empathy is an innate cognitive feature we share with most social mammals, cognitive empathy is a skill that can be developed and refined and doing so is key to the behavioral patterns of both psychopaths and sociopaths.

Europe's aggressive commissioner overseeing competition, is still investigating aspects of Google's business and whether Amazon plays fair in the market for generic products.

- President Trump has said his administration is seriously looking into monopolistic behavior of Facebook, Google and Amazon.

Some analysts predict an economic slowdown — even if it doesn't lead to a recession like the one in 2008 — will be enough to change the global attitude around big American companies.

"So the really shocking thing this year is that the only major economy in the world where growth has actually accelerated this year is America. And this is because of the tax cuts, the deregulation, the other stimulus which has been put into work. And that has also helped the earnings of companies. My point is, from next year onwards, those effects begin to fade."

The "FAANG" stocks (Facebook, Amazon, Apple, Netflix and Google) that pushed the stock market to record highs have not been immune from this year's market rout.

- "The mood has changed. Investors are asking a lot more questions right now," says Larry Glazer, a Managing Partner at Mayflower Advisors, which manages $3 billion. "Momentum has faded on these names."

- Adding to potential concern: possible regulatory action could translate into higher costs, particularly for Google or Facebook.

- "Facebook has been under such a dark cloud for so long that now everybody is expecting the worst," Paul Meeks, a technology portfolio manager at Wireless Fund, told Axios.

The other side: "I don't see a looming recession. And even if there was, people aren't going to target these companies if there is a recession," says Nicholas Economides, Professor of Economics at NYU Stern School of Business.

- Economides argues that, even if there was a mild reduction in GDP growth, it wouldn't significantly impact the high tech sector.

- For companies like Google, Facebook and Twitter, "their main revenue streams are from ads. They gain market share from brands converting traditional ad spend to digital ads. This conversion is not so dependent on the growth of GDP, because they are still in the process of converting ads of different formats to digital ads, and that's something that will continue, regardless of GDP growth."

The bottom line: Tech companies that have long been the darlings of investor portfolios will likely find themselves in much weaker positions.

Days after the president's tweets, China listed three "red lines," positions the United States had taken in the trade talks that were unacceptable: First, that it would keep tariffs in place for a period after the proposed trade agreement was signed. Second, that it could impose punitive tariffs if it judged China to be in violation of the agreement, and that China would be forbidden from retaliating with its own tariffs. Third, the ever-inflating expectations of the terms under which Beijing would buy American goods under a proposed bilateral purchasing agreement.

These "red lines" were new. Before that, China's negotiating team had a fully flexible remit from the leadership. But not anymore. Now that these three lines are in the public domain, there is no way Chinese leaders can yield on them. The leaks of large parts of the negotiating text to the American news media has added a new level of toxicity, making it virtually impossible to return to the existing text as a basis of negotiations. Together with recent moves against the Chinese telecom company Huawei presumably intended to pressure Beijing further, the possibility of negotiating a revised agreement that is more accommodating to American interests is now very slim.

Instead, what I have seen in Beijing over the last few weeks is a country moving in exactly the opposite direction.

Donald Trump's Great Patriotic Wars May 26, 2019

Economic analysts, meanwhile, have been calculating the impact of a full-blown trade war, estimating a loss of about 1.2 percentage points to Chinese G.D.P. growth. This figure is now portrayed in the Chinese media as entirely manageable given China's capacity to use fiscal and monetary policy stimulus to support domestic demand and keep growth above 6 percent.

Even if a trade deal with the United States is still possible, some in the Chinese leadership are now starting to ask, why bother? They argue that in technology, investment, foreign policy, national security and human rights, the Trump administration has made it clear that it has embarked on a more adversarial position toward China. So why should Beijing expend any more political capital on a trade deal? Perhaps it's better, in China's view, to cut its losses now and get ready for the next Cold War.

other in fickle and short-lived alliances, ultimately their goals will collide and the relationship deteriorates into mutually self-defeating conflicts. This, too, acts as negative selection and maintains the low frequency of this peculiar phenotype.

On the other side of the conflict is the selective pressure on the rest of society. Because sociopaths are rare, the intensity of the pressure on society to detect and neutralize them is correspondingly weak. Weak pressure leads to poor adaptation, while sociopaths experience strong pressure and become highly adapted. However, as the sociopath phenotype finds evolutionary success, the pressure flips back the other direction as the rest of society experiences increasing pressure, adapts, and then pushes the frequency of the sociopaths back down to the basal level. In human culture, this pendulum swings in both the long time scales of genetic evolution and the short time scales of cultural evolution. In both contexts, the conflict is cyclical.

With this evolutionary framework in mind, we can now return to the question of President Trump. Clearly, he attracts devoted supporters. When it serves him, he can be affable, charming, and flattering. He reads people well and can maneuver through his relationships in order to obtain the best “deal” for himself. While many question his capacity for emotional empathy, his skills in cognitive empathy are undeniable.

However, he also has maintained an unwavering pursuit of wealth, influence, and power, even by his own admission. He has never participated in regular religious observance, is not outwardly pious, and shows no allegiance to political party. It is well documented that his views have shifted, sometimes repeatedly, on the most central political questions of the day such as abortion, government involvement in healthcare, military interventionism, federal drug policy, and LGBTQ rights. While only his critics view him as racist and xenophobic, even his supporters see him as fiercely nationalistic and his own campaign slogan of “America First” underscores this. And finally, he aggressively pursues his own biological fitness through the placement of his children in top positions in both his business enterprises and his presidential administration. Thus, an evolutionary analysis reveals that he is clearly not a psychopath.

Whether or not he is a narcissistic sociopath, then, depends on the answers to questions about his conscience or lack thereof, commitment to truth and transparency, sincerity in his religious beliefs, fidelity to political ideals, and tendency to cheat, deceive, and coerce. These questions are more like Rorschach tests in which his supporters and detractors come to the exact opposite conclusions. However, for the most part, the answers to these questions do not require a psychological analysis of the President. There is abundant evidence in the public record.

Trump Hands China an Easy Win in the Trade War

The president's tough rhetoric plays into Chinese economic nationalism.

By Kevin Rudd
Mr. Rudd, a former prime minister of Australia, is the president of the Asia Society Policy Institute.

May 29, 2019

When President Trump tweeted on May 5 that the China trade deal was off, the historical echoes in Beijing were loud and clear. Almost exactly 100 years earlier, China's "May Fourth Movement" of 1919 was a direct response to the actions of President Woodrow Wilson at the end of World War I. Wilson had promised China, an American ally, that German colonies in Shandong would be returned to Chinese sovereignty, but instead handed them to Japan. China exploded with anti-American, nationalist sentiment. One of the eventual consequences was the establishment of the Chinese Communist Party, which for the last 70 years has ruled the country.

Thus, Mr. Trump has handed Xi Jinping a remarkably effective nationalist card to play at a time when he has been under pressure at home because of a slowing economy. The Chinese media is now full of accounts of the country's economic resilience and appeals to patriotism, even invoking the spirit of the Korean War, when, according to the official narrative, China was able to stare down the vastly superior American military.

And just in case people didn't get the point, Mr. Xi recently visited Jiangxi, the starting point of the Long March in 1934, in which the Communist Party endured many hardships but ultimately emerged victorious.

I can almost hear members of the Trump administration groaning. Why on earth would they need to take into consideration events in China's ancient past?

The answer depends on what Mr. Trump's primary objective is. If it's to sound tough to American voters, he may well have a winning formula. But if it's to bring about a substantive change in China's negotiating posture toward a bilateral trade agreement, one that might usher in changes in China's trade policy, addressing questions of forced technology transfers, intellectual property theft, industrial subsidies, currency manipulation and a phalanx of other non-tariff barriers, I'm not so sure.

Donald Trump Used Legally Dubious Method to Avoid Paying Taxes

Donald J. Trump proudly acknowledges he did not pay a dime in federal income taxes for years on end. He insists he merely exploited tax loopholes legally available to any billionaire — loopholes he says Hillary Clinton failed to close during her years in the United States Senate. “Why didn’t she ever try to change those laws so I couldn’t use them?” Mr. Trump asked during a campaign rally last month.

But newly obtained documents show that in the early 1990s, as he scrambled to stave off financial ruin, Mr. Trump avoided reporting hundreds of millions of dollars in taxable income by using a tax avoidance

Mr. Tarek El Sayed,

I hope this email finds you well, and believe worth communicating my thoughts to you.

I was surprised to hear that you decided against the purchase of our Super Boeing 727. I personally thought it was a great match for your business needs in Qatar. If for any reason your decision was based on crew issues and charter needs in the Middle East, I'd like to share some information that might prove beneficial to making you reconsider this purchase.

The pilot candidates I have lined up for your interview along with the possibility of David Rodgers joining your flight department were as follows:

(at no time did I disclose location or persons to the following pilot candidates to protect your privacy.)

Robert Breslin, who is the former Chief Pilot of Mr. Donald Trump, Mr. Breslin flew the Boeing 727 and Boeing 757 owned by Mr Trump. Mr Breslin is a fine man of 40 years of age estimate, with extensive VIP Boeing operations.

James Bartakowski, who has extensive flying experience in the Middle east, Africa and Europe régime. Mr. Bartakowski has also been involved in charter operations in Africa and Middle East and has contacted me on several recent occasions with charters for our Boeing 727, James has indicated there is the possibility of 40 – 60 hours per month charter operations for larger transport category aircraft in your area. I believe there is a growing need for charter in the business community in Qatar and neighboring countries.

Bruce Jafahri, who is a current Boeing 727 captain who lived in Doha for two years, and familiar with international operations of Boeing 727 aircraft. Mr. Jafahri currently lives in California and ready for a new opportunity. Bruce is current in the Boeing 727 and also flew Captain on the Boeing 747. Well qualified individual and personable.

Mr. El Sayed, as you have seen during our demo flight, our Boeing 727 is in impeccable condition, quite cabin and will provide many years of charter and business flights your company. I believe the large business jet future in Qatar is growing and you will be leading its path, and your initial investment in this purchase will not come close with other aircraft options on the market as you may have seen already.

We are currently completing the C2C check on the Boeing, and as we have done in the past, assure you it will be a fine aircraft when it leaves Flight Star Maintenance repair facility.

Sincerely,

Lawrance Visoski

Dear Jeffrey,

Recently while refurbishing Donald Trump's 757 I worked closely with his Director of Business Development / Special Counsel, Michael Boccio.

Although I have worked with some very intelligent and creative individuals, Michael is a real stand out – he is impressive on many levels.

Someone (or organization) is going to be excited to have someone with Michael's capabilities working for them and thought that you may need someone like Michael on your team or have a friend who may be in search of a dynamic individual with his background and talent.

Please take a moment to read the attached documents to see if Michael is someone you are looking for. If not, I ask that you forward this e-mail to someone you believe would greatly benefit by having Michael work for them.

I know that I always appreciate when a friend refers someone who can be of great help to me – personally or in business.

If you have any questions about working with Michael, please do not hesitate to call me.

Thank you.

Jeffrey-

I need to start off by stating that it is not my intent to go around Shawn Lancaster on this – Shawn is a friend.

This being said, I have received e-mails from both you and Larry this weekend.

I called Larry and he said I should send you an e-mail.

I called a close friend of mine inquiring about the GV market and aircraft that are “not published”. As of today, there are eight (8) of these aircraft that are not yet on the market.

Let me know if you would like to speak with him and by what means (you call him, he call you, call Larry?....whatever).

By the way, his company sold Trumps 727 and got Trump a very attractive number for an aircraft that was on it’s way to a museum.

Hope all is well.

Our second project is a 405 acre development in Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, that is probably the prettiest piece of property I know of in the U.S. that is zoned and developable. Its business plan is now underway and we should be in the financing mode this fall. My impression is that there is a tremendous amount of money on the sidelines, but the top 5% or 10% that control it are terribly frightened of losing money they don't need, while the 90% to 95% of the citizens are continuing their daily labors somewhat frightened that they are not certain where next month's or next year's mortgage payment is coming from.

Business Standard MUMBAI | THURSDAY, 30 MARCH 2017

After Trump phone call, govt weighs if Modi should visit US early

ARCHIS MOHAN
New Delhi, 29 March

The Monday night phone call of US President Donald Trump to Prime Minister Narendra Modi could pave the way for an early visit of the Indian PM to Washington. The Trump administration is keen to host Modi. But South Block is looking at the potential deliverables from such a visit, particularly on H1B visas. The Indian PM's political stature has increased manifold after his recent electoral successes, while Trump's presidential tenure has moved from one problem to another.

Delhi doesn't want Modi to invest his substantial political capital to help Trump burnish his image, without the visit yielding positive results for the Indian side. Modi is scheduled to visit New York to attend the UN General Assembly in September. But, the Trump-Modi telephonic conversation has indicated to South Block, and to those who look at foreign policy issues within the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), that the Trump administration is keen to host the Indian PM for a bilateral visit in the next couple of months.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi

US President Donald Trump

Earlier this month, Foreign Secretary S Jaishankar, accompanied by Commerce Secretary Rita Teaotia, was in the US. Last week, National Security Advisor Ajit Kumar Doval was also on a visit to the US. External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj and US Secretary of State Rex W Tillerson had also recently spoken over the phone.

In his phone call, Trump congratulated Modi on his recent state election victories, expressed support for his economic reforms and said he had great respect for Indians, and said he looked forward to hosting the PM later this year.

The window for such a visit is available in May, as well as in June after the PM attends the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation Summit in Kazakhstan in the second week.The PM's US visit could take place before his visit to Hamburg, in Germany, to attend the G20 Summit on July 7-8, and his bilateral visit to Israel around that time.

It will be the first-ever visit of an Indian PM to Israel. The highlight of his policy changes will be the PM's outreach to the Indian diaspora there. Israel has 85,000 Jews of Indian origin. Jews are an influential community in the US, and some of these groups had engaged with Modi even during his time as the Gujarat chief minister.

According to a source, Modi's visit to the US before Tel Aviv could help the PM engage with the Jewish community there, which would contribute to the success of his Israel visit.

On Tuesday, the Indo-American Chamber of Commerce urged an early visit of the PM to the US to "sort out the apprehensions" of the Indian industry on the negative impact of tightening of visa rules relating to H1B and L1 visas.

Mr. Weinberg

I was referred to you by Alan Dershowitz, who told me you're Jeffrey Epstein's attorney.

If this is the case, I was hoping to reach him through you to see if he'd be willing to speak on the record about his ties - or previous ties - to both the Clintons and Donald Trump?

Would you be able to arrange a call or email exchange this week?

Thanks for your consideration.

A few things to think about:

If the Patterson book is being published in August, that presents some time frame issues. You would not be able to do a competing book or documentary before then. This is not to say that they shouldn't be pursued. In a sense, better that they know what Patterson's position is and, a year from now say, be able to counter it. I have some thoughts on book and doc to share at your convenience.

That being said, you do need an immediate counter narrative to the book. I believe Trump offers an ideal opportunity. It's a chance to make the story about something other than you, while, at the same time, letting you frame your own story. Also, becoming an anti-Trump voice gives you a certain political cover which you decidedly don't have now. Still, this necessary involves you going public. And so the most basic decision is about your willingness to do that. My view is that in a couple of weeks you could master message and technical proficiency. I know a bunch of people who could be very helpful here. This would involve something along the lines of you writing an op-ed, doing a high profile television interview (Charlie Rose, I'd say), and perhaps some social media efforts.

Speaking of which, again, I think a strategic plan, involving your public identity, philanthropic activities and interests, and the development of media allies, ought finally to be put in place. A big, comprehensive, expensive effort.

The alternative is to continue to keep head down and hope Patterson book is just more he-said she-said and Connolly getting lost in the reeds (which, as an inveterate conspiracist, he always does). My worry is that Patterson can be counted on to produce a bestseller, and while he isn't regarded as a serious writer, he'll surely be unloading a lot of tabloid copy. Because this will be tied to the election, the Trump-Clinton angle will amp up the attention 10-fold, in fact, possibly, a hundred fold. Possibly more than anything you've encountered before.

Meanwhile--

In a lawyer's letter, I'd suggest including the following points--not necessarily legal, but a warning about how a press campaign might unfold (publishers are more worried about being caught in negative media controversy than they are of legal threats):

1) Little, Brown has made on the record representations to at least one well-known journalist that it was not publishing a book by James Patterson about Jeffrey Epstein--possibly an effort to avoid inquiries about the questionable nature of the book;

2) The actual author of the book, John Connolly, is someone other than the stated author, James Patterson. Connolly is known to have developed an obsession with Epstein, such that, his longtime employer, Vanity Fair, has refused to allow him to write about Epstein for the magazine;

3) Sources have confirmed for us that Patterson has had little more than a minimal consulting role in the book, and that Connolly has functioned in every material way as the book's researcher and writer. We believe Patterson's "authorship" of the book will not stand up to scrutiny. And, indeed, that the entire notion of an extension of the Patterson franchise into nonfiction, as it has been used in fiction and children's book--effectively other authors writing under the Patterson name—presents a host of journalism ethical issues.

Porter is giving me a tour of the so-called Billionaire’s Row, a stretch of South Ocean Boulevard on the island of Palm Beach that is bordered by some of the highest hedges I’ve ever seen. Through gaps in the greenery appear stone fountains, elephant statues, pools the size of tennis complexes (next to actual tennis complexes), and more clay roofs than one could count. What do we think of this?

https://www.axios.com/recession-threat-2019-regulatory-risk-google-facebook-amazon-b8966b22-57dc-426c-9f4f-5526982383c7.html

Slowing economy could increase pressure on Big Tech

Sara Fischer, David McCabe, Courtenay Brown5 hours ago

A potential recession, combined with increasing regulatory threats for some of the biggest tech companies, foreshadows a difficult 2019 for Silicon Valley.

Why it matters: The biggest tech companies have already raked in billions of dollars in profits and benefited from major tax cuts that aren't going to be repeated, so next year isn't likely to be better for them financially. They've also been dogged by scandals that have left many questioning their positive role in society, and if on top of that the economy starts to slip, 2019 could be worse.

"People look for scapegoats in a bad economy. And with big tech already on its heels, a downturn probably would feed arguments that the largest internet companies are too big and need to be reined in."

— Paul Gallant, an analyst with Cowen Washington Research Group

Big Tech is closing out a contentious year in Washington, and potential regulation will continue to haunt it well into 2019.

- Google CEO Sundar Pichai has agreed to testify before Congress, and will likely be asked about whether the company is being transparent about its data privacy practices and any potential bias. By the year's end, the CEOs of Twitter, Google and Facebook will have been called to testified in front of Congress for the first time ever during 2018.
- Lawmakers in the United States are pushing for a federal privacy law with an urgency likely to be exacerbated by more breaches like the one Marriott disclosed last Friday.
- The Federal Trade Commission still has an open investigation into whether Facebook's conduct violated a previous settlement with the agency. Margrethe Vestager,

I wrote this email for your review, if you think its worth sending, please critique, and let me know,. thank you:

Mr. Tarek El Sayed,

I hope this email finds you well, and believe worth communicating my thoughts to you.

I was surprised to hear that you decided against the purchase of our Super Boeing 727. I personally thought it was a great match for your business needs in Qatar. If for any reason your decision was based on crew issues and charter needs in the Middle East, I'd like to share some information that might prove beneficial to making you reconsider this purchase.

The pilot candidates I have lined up for your interview along with the possibility of David Rodgers joining your flight department were as follows:

(at no time did I disclose location or persons to the following pilot candidates to protect your privacy.)

Robert Breslin, who is the former Chief Pilot of Mr. Donald Trump, Mr. Breslin flew the Boeing 727 and Boeing 757 owned by Mr Trump. Mr Breslin is a fine man of 40 years of age estimate, with extensive VIP Boeing operations.

James Bartakowski, who has extensive flying experience in the Middle east, Africa and Europe régime. Mr. Bartakowski has also been involved in charter operations in Africa and Middle East and has contacted me on several recent occasions with charters for our Boeing 727, James has indicated there is the possibility of 40 – 60 hours per month charter operations for larger transport category aircraft in your area. I believe there is a growing need for charter in the business community in Qatar and neighboring countries.

Bruce Jafahri, who is a current Boeing 727 captain who lived in Doha for two years, and familiar with international operations of Boeing 727 aircraft. Mr. Jafahri currently lives in California and ready for a new opportunity. Bruce is current in the Boeing 727 and also flew Captain on the Boeing 747. Well qualified individual and personable.

Mr. El Sayed, as you have seen during our demo flight, our Boeing 727 is in impeccable condition, quite cabin and will provide many years of charter and business flights your company. I believe the large business jet future in Qatar is growing and you will be leading its path, and your initial investment in this purchase will not come close with other aircraft options on the market as you may have seen already.

We are currently completing the C2C check on the Boeing, and as we have done in the past, assure you it will be a fine aircraft when it leaves Flight Star Maintenance repair facility.

Sincerely,

Lawrance Visoski

Fareed Zakaria: Trump sells America short

Dear Donald Trump: China, Japan and Mexico are not "killing us"

By Fareed Zakaria, Thursday, September 17, 2015

Donald Trump's presidential bid is centered on the promise of his personal talents. He says he's the "most successful person ever to run for the presidency, by far." (George Washington and Dwight Eisenhower, sit down!) But if there is an idea animating his candidacy, it is that the United States is being badly beaten by its economic competitors. In his speech on foreign policy this week, Trump explained that America is being bested by countries such as China, Japan and Mexico because their leaders are "smarter, more cunning and sharper than our leaders." "They're killing us," he often says.

This is an odd moment to make these charges because the reality is almost entirely the opposite. The United States is more dominant on the global economic landscape than at any point since the heyday of Bill Clinton's presidency — perhaps even more so.

Last quarter, the U.S. economy grew at a 3.7 percent clip. Annual growth now is almost twice that of Europe and four times that of Japan. Unemployment is at 5.1 percent, the lowest in seven years. The deficit as a percentage of gross domestic product (2.8 percent in 2014) is at its lowest since 2007.

"The U.S. has come out of the 2008 crisis better than all the others," says Ruchir Sharma, head of global macro investing at Morgan Stanley. "Americans have reduced their debt burden more than the Europeans, while China's debt has skyrocketed to extremely dangerous levels. If you look outside of China, U.S. growth is actually faster even than the emerging markets. Since the 2008 crisis, U.S. equity markets have outperformed all others — in fact 9 out of the 10 most valuable companies in the world are now American. The dollar is the currency of choice. Global growth is not what it used to be, but in a bad neighborhood, the U.S. has the best house by far." Sharma points out that for the past four years, the United States' share of global GDP has increased while Europe's and Japan's have moved down.

When I was in Europe last week, businessmen there were concerned with what they saw as a new level of U.S. dominance in everything from technology to entertainment to finance. Consider America's big banks. They were at the epicenter of the financial crisis and were badly battered by it. Since then, bankers have complained that they've faced uncertainty about government policies, overzealous regulators trying to compensate for their laxness before the crisis and the unwieldy burdens of the Dodd-Frank law.

Well, U.S. banks today are more dominant than ever. The Wall Street Journal notes that in the past five years, JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Citigroup, Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley have increased in value by $254.6 billion. In the same period, their European competitors, Barclays, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank, UBS and Royal Bank of Scotland added just $9.5 billion. In July, Barclays Chairman John McFarlane was asked if America's banks were eating European lenders' lunch. He replied: "They are doing a good job of it." He added that the U.S. banks "are the only ones that really claim to be global and successful."

Why Palm Beach, Florida Is The 'New Greenwich' For Wall Streeters

JACQUELINE DETWILER, DUJOUR

The Palm Beach finance crowd can paddleboard whenever they please.

Behind a semicircular brick drive and a lawn as manicured as a putting green sits a 30,000-square-foot masterpiece of Italian Renaissance architecture called Casa Nana.

John Porter, a real estate associate for Corcoran who oversees some of the largest sales in Palm Beach County, Florida, points out the spiral staircase, built by famed 1920s architect Addison Mizner for the founder of the National Tea Company. “This home went for $30.2 million in 2003; today that sum wouldn’t be in the top 25 highest prices” of houses for sale in this area, Porter says. “Palm Beach real estate has gone from nothing going on to nothing left to sell.”

Porter is giving me a tour of the so-called Billionaire’s Row, a stretch of South Ocean Boulevard on the island of Palm Beach that is bordered by some of the highest hedges I’ve ever seen. Through gaps in the greenery appear stone fountains, elephant statues, pools the size of tennis complexes (next to actual tennis complexes), and more clay roofs than one could count. It’s a monumental display of wealth, and it is rapidly expanding, not just here but in Delray Beach, Jupiter, Palm Beach Gardens and Boca Raton, as money pours out of the Northeast (and in some cases, from as far as London and Singapore) and into this already wealthy section of southeast Florida. Approximately 70 hedge and private equity funds are now headquartered here, many of which have set up shop in the last two years, jacking up home prices and spurring a countywide initiative to become, as some have said, “the new Greenwich.”

For hedge fund managers who might normally be inclined toward Westchester or Connecticut, the allure of South Florida is as plain as grits on toast. The homes are sprawling; the Intracoastal Waterway is a yachter’s paradise. It has a glittering social scene. During high season—October through March—there might be several fundraisers on any given night. Perhaps the key factor, however: In Florida, there are no individual income taxes, no estate taxes and no capital gains taxes. A hedge fund manager reporting $1 million in income can expect to pay only the federal government, whereas his counterpart living in Connecticut pays that plus an extra $67,000. And if the poor schmuck were still in New York City? He’d better be ready to fork over $104,300.

As for why all of this is happening now, when Florida has long been a sunny tax haven, so to speak, financiers point to the upcoming application of Section 457A of the Internal Revenue Code. Before 457A was enacted, certain fees and related earnings could grow tax deferred in offshore accounts for up to ten years. But now, according to the section, hedge fund managers will need to funnel all of the fees that were deferred before 2009 and their related earnings back into the U.S. by 2017. If a manager lives in Indeed, much of the art that was critical of these movements was suppressed or censored and “subversive” artists cowed, in some cases imprisoned or even worse.

The liberal democratic model departed sharply from these authoritarian perspectives by presenting the alternative of free and transparent elections, the rule of law and freedom of speech. In the mid-war period the three narratives were competing to be the conceptual frame for society. After the Second World War fascism was crushed leaving the two competing ideologies of communism and liberal democracy. After the demise of communism in 1989, through to the late 1990’s, liberal democracy was victorious in the idealogical battlefield. Some historians, like Francis Fukuyama, went so far as to proclaim this period as “the end of history”.

A key piece of art that championed this kind of ideology was Sheppard Fairey’s campaign poster for Barack Obama. In this poster, Fairey, a well established graffiti artist uses urban colours and stencilling techniques combined with the message “HOPE” to promote the incoming presidents positive values and popularity with the young. It is notable that Fairey’s most recent political poster protests the Trump presidency rather than promote it.

With the rise of so called “illiberal democracy”, with strong parties standing for populist ideologies, we have now moved into what can be described as the age of bewilderment. We were not in fact at the “end of history”. Once again the future looks unpredictable and insecure and artists are responding in different ways.

Jeremy Deller, a British Turner prize winning artist created a work which features a car damaged in the bombing of the historic Mutanabbi Street book market, which resulted in the deaths of 38 people. Here, an art work has been used to show the aftermath of an event. This event was the result of the Iraq war, which was seen as a way to spread democracy. Here Art is used as a means by which to explore the effects of ideology rather than promote it, another really interesting area in the study of the intersections between ideology and art.

Exploring how art reflects the historical and ideological contexts of the world around it is fascinating to me and I would love to study these ideas in more depth at undergraduate level.

Conflicting reports have surfaced on the possible resignation or firing of US Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, who oversees the special counsel investigation into Russia's role in the 2016 presidential election.Â

According to US media, Rosenstein was meeting with White House Chief of Staff John Kelly after reports surfaced that he had offered to resign in speculation of being fired.Â

Axios, citing an unidentified source with knowledge of the matter, reported that Rosenstein verbally resigned to White House Chief of Staff John Kelly. A second source told the news outlet that Rosenstein is "expecting to be fired" so he plans to step down.Â

The Wall Street Journal, citing an individual familiar with the matter, reported that Rosenstein has not submitted his resignation.

NBC News reported that Rosenstein said he would not resign and the White House would have to fire him.

Reuters news agency, also citing a person familiar with the matter, said Rosenstein had not resigned and is still serving as US deputy attorney general. The news agency reported that the unnamed source confirmed that the deputy attorney general had a previously scheduled meeting at the White House on Monday and that the Axios reports were false.Â

The reports come as Trump faces mounting pressure from the investigation by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is looking into Russia's role in the 2016 presidential election.Â

Rosenstein assumed supervision of the investigation after his boss, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, recused himself because of his own contacts with Russia's ambassador to Washington while serving as a Trump campaign adviser became public.Â

There was widespread speculation that Trump would fire Rosenstein after a New York Times report on Friday said in 2017 he had suggested secretly recording Trump and recruiting Cabinet members to invoke a constitutional amendment to remove him from the office. The newspaper said none of those proposals came to fruition. Rosenstein denied the report as "inaccurate and factually incorrect".Â

In your answers to ROGS, you list Milton Center for girls as facility that Jane Doe attended. Milton Center is a Department of Juvenile Justice facility; therefore I will need to get her records from DJJ. DJJ will not release the records without a signed release by Jane Doe. I have attached a general HIPPA release for your review. Would you please have Jane Doe sign it? DJJ does not have a standard form.

Also, will you agree to one more week on Responses to Net Wirth ROGS??

Please let me know.

On June 3, 2019, Semyon Rosenfeld, the last living Holocaust survivor who participated in the revolt and escape from the Sobibor death camp, died at the age of 97 in Israel. Rosenfeld joined the Red Army in 1940. While he was fighting the Germans, his family was killed by the Nazis. He was captured by the Germans in 1941 and, two years later, he was transferred to Sobibor. Rosenfeld escaped during the revolt and survived by hiding in the woods until 1944. He then rejoined the Red Army and participated in the capture of Berlin.

Views on Israel of U.S. Presidential Candidates 2020: Joe Biden

Former Vice President Joseph Robinette Biden, Jr., was born November 20, 1942, in Scranton, Pennsylvania, the first of four siblings. In 1953, the Biden family moved from Pennsylvania to Claymont, Delaware. He graduated from the University of Delaware and Syracuse Law School.

One of his first overseas visits as a senator was to Israel, on the eve of the 1973 Yom Kippur War during which he met Golda Meir. “She read letters and told me how this young man or woman had died and this is their family. This went on for I don’t know how long, and I guess she could tell I was visibly moved by this, and I was getting depressed about it.” The Prime Minister said, “Senator, don’t look so sad….we have a secret weapon in our confrontation in this part of the world. And I thought she was about to lean over and tell me about a new system or something….she said, our secret weapon, Senator, is we have no place else to go. We have no place else to go.”

Howard Schultz

By Daryl Cagle on Feb 09, 2019 12:13 pm

I forgot to post my cartoon from week before last, about Howard Schultz, the prospective independent presidential candidate, billionaire and Starbucks magnate. Schultz threatens to split the vote for a Democratic party candidate, possibly throwing the election to Donald Trump.

The two legged Starbucks mermaid logo is so disturbing that I love to draw it whenever I can. Here’s the original Starbucks logo, that customers didn’t like. See the evolution of the Starbucks logo here.

Bezos owns) hold back publication on their investigation of AMI, and that Bezos stop a private investigator he hired to look into AMI – otherwise they would publish photos of Bezos' penis. Bezos was brave to expose Pecker's extortion.

It is interesting that Pecker and AMI seems to have such success with blackmail that his attorneys didn't step back to think of what would happen if the person they were blackmailing simply made their emails public.

AMI is looking pretty sleazy these days, with likely links to Saudi Arabia, and a reported safe full of Donald Trump secrets, among other tawdry stuff. So, I took advantage of Pecker's dickish name and pulled Pecker's pants down. Some cartoons are fun to draw – even if editors won't publish them much.

To compare the United States' performance and leadership to Mexico's, Japan's and China's is particularly ill-timed. Trump might be stuck in a 1980s time warp on Japan. When his "The Art of the Deal" was published in 1987, Americans were envious of Japan's brilliant leaders, who were said to be outsmarting the United States at every turn. Since then, Japan has become the poster child for economic stagnation and political paralysis. Prime Minister Shinzo Abe has been unwilling or unable to get his promised reforms enacted, and the country's economy continues to shrink.

Mexico is watching its growth collapse. While its president, Enrique Peña Nieto, is a courageous and intelligent leader who has made some very bold decisions, he has also made some significant missteps. Most important, the country was ill-prepared for plunging oil prices that have battered government revenues and growth.

China has had three decades of supercharged growth and competent government policy. But in the past few years, Beijing went on a borrowing binge, running up its total debt to levels that are unprecedented, according to Sharma. And in the past two months it has made mistakes in managing both its equity markets and currency — mistakes that have cost $400 billion, the Financial Times reports.

Of course, the United States has problems that are worrying, such as wage stagnation and low labor-force participation. But the important comparison is not to some ideal fantasy of what America might be but to other countries in the real world. And the facts show, Mr. Trump, we're killing them .

On June 3, 2019, Semyon Rosenfeld, the last living Holocaust survivor who participated in the revolt and escape from the Sobibor death camp, died at the age of 97 in Israel. Rosenfeld joined the Red Army in 1940. While he was fighting the Germans, his family was killed by the Nazis. He was captured by the Germans in 1941 and, two years later, he was transferred to Sobibor. Rosenfeld escaped during the revolt and survived by hiding in the woods until 1944. He then rejoined the Red Army and participated in the capture of Berlin.

Views on Israel of U.S. Presidential Candidates 2020:
Joe Biden

Former Vice President Joseph Robinette Biden, Jr., was born November 20, 1942, in Scranton, Pennsylvania, the first of four siblings. In 1953, the Biden family moved from Pennsylvania to Claymont, Delaware. He graduated from the University of Delaware and Syracuse Law School.

One of his first overseas visits as a senator was to Israel, on the eve of the 1973 Yom Kippur War during which he met Golda Meir. “She read letters and told me how this young man or woman had died and this is their family. This went on for I don’t know how long, and I guess she could tell I was visibly moved by this, and I was getting depressed about it.” The Prime Minister said, “Senator, don’t look so sad….we have a secret weapon in our confrontation in this part of the world. And I thought she was about to lean over and tell me about a new system or something….she said, our secret weapon, Senator, is we have no place else to go. We have no place else to go.”

The logo was intended to depict the merger of two coffee companies, the original Starbucks and Howard Schultz's company, Il Gornale that purchased Starbucks. Starbucks has a nautical theme to go with the character of Seattle. “Starbuck” was the name of the first mate in the novel Moby Dick.

This two legged, merger-mermaid is nasty, which makes it great fodder for cartoons. I drew the mermaid last year when there was a racism scandal at Starbucks, leading the company to shut down for a day to do racial sensitivity training. This logo-fish-girl would scare anybody!

Brad –

In your answers to ROGS, you list Milton Center for girls as facility that Jane Doe attended. Milton Center is a Department of Juvenile Justice facility; therefore I will need to get her records from DJJ. DJJ will not release the records without a signed release by Jane Doe. I have attached a general HIPPA release for your review. Would you please have Jane Doe sign it? DJJ does not have a standard form.

Also, will you agree to one more week on Responses to Net Wirth ROGS??

Please let me know.

A great international hue and cry followed the Trump administration’s announcement the U.S. would no longer fund the UN Relief and Works Agency (UNWRA) because it is an “irredeemably flawed operation.” Historically, the United States was the organization’s biggest funder – in 2017, the U.S. covered nearly one-third of the agency’s budget of $1.1 billion. Angered by the Palestinians’ refusal to restart peace talks with Israel, however, the administration cut its contribution in early 2018 from $364 million to $60 million before ceasing payments altogether.

How Obama Blew the Chance for Economic Peace

by Mitchell Bard

IIn 2009, Barack Obama had an unprecedented opportunity to advance the peace process between Israel and the Palestinians. For the first time, the Palestinians had a prime minister who was respected and admired by the Israelis, because he did not come from the same terrorist background as Yasser Arafat and Mahmoud Abbas. Unlike his ideological comrades who insisted on "liberating Palestine," Salam Fayyad, was interested in building the infrastructure for a future state, strengthening the West Bank economy, and improving the lives of the Palestinian people.

Newly obtained tax information reveals that from 1985 to 1994, Donald J. Trump's businesses were in far bleaker condition than was previously known.

Subject: Cuba trip
Attachments: CUBA TRAVEL DOCUMENTATION 11 JAN 2017.docx; Untitled attachment 233034.txt

Jeffrey
I've contact Universal ref Cuba trip:
Attached is current form they are utilizing,.
See note from UVAir below:

Hello Larry,
This year we have had quite a few successful Cuba trips with clients over the past year or so that Cuba travel has resumed. Attached are the rules and regulations that we currently operate under.
Keep in mind on 16 Jun 2017, President Donald Trump has announced changes that are to come regarding Cuban and US relations. This means the regulations are being rewritten to reflect these changes and are to be published 30-90 days from that date. We do not have advance notice on how the regulations will be written or exactly how it will affect our Cuba licensing but we are sure they will have some impact on us.

Until further notice we are still utilizing the attached information. I will keep an eye out for updates on Cuba restrictions; however, we should start the process as we have in the past.

We will need the following documents form you:
1. In the attached document on page number 10 there is a "Cubia BIS Certification Form" We will need this filled out by the PIC for the trip. This is a self-authorization form for the aircraft and should be kept on file after the trip in case the Department of Treasury asks for it in the future.
2. We will also need the "Passenger Certification" form for each passenger on board. They will need to advise purpose of travel under section 1. If they do not fall under any of those then they will need a specific license from the Department of Treasury.

After we receive the above documents for the aircraft and passengers we can start arranging handing and landing permits for the trip.

Thank you,

They try to keep this story going from every angle. Now dershowitz isn't involved; rather he is a high powered lawyer. I didn't know you also had lefkowitz. I met the guy once when a prospective client asked me to try a case with him. One meeting was enough for me to see clearly that that would not have worked out well; but he apparemtly is a successful lawyer.

One thing for sure the article gets wrong - that the "victims" were silenced.

Hope you are doing well.

Apologies for requesting support in what was originally intended as an update on work done i am done with that, you will receive no more messages from me regarding funding, i am most grateful for your help—without it, i doubt i would have a book in view on Honour killings—i can finish it on my own and fully intend to you once said you would "never not support me" but never, as we both know, is a very long time—i am much more scared of Trump's capacity to destroy the stock market—but as long as i do not get orders from you to sell, i will ride it out

i hope everything is good in your life

warmest best, as always

I have heard some things about it.
B of A has note on house and the land across the street now subdivided into lots (a few acres each) called Vineyard Estates.
Farm Credit Bank has note on winery and equipment.
Trump has tried to make a deal with the lenders but didnt. He may bid.
I'll find out current status.

Paul Rampell does act as Donald Trump's attorney for some personal, real estate and Town of PB matters. James Green of WPB also does work for Trump (like the American flag matter) usually through Rampell. I think another firm was doing the airport flight path and expansion matter.

Jeffrey-

I need to start off by stating that it is not my intent to go around Shawn Lancaster on this – Shawn is a friend.

This being said, I have received e-mails from both you and Larry this weekend.

I called Larry and he said I should send you an e-mail.

I called a close friend of mine inquiring about the GV market and aircraft that are “not published”. As of today, there are eight (8) of these aircraft that are not yet on the market.

Let me know if you would like to speak with him and by what means (you call him, he call you, call Larry?....whatever).

By the way, his company sold Trumps 727 and got Trump a very attractive number for an aircraft that was on it’s way to a museum.

Hope all is well.

Sincerely,

Eric Roth

BBC World News – Robert Lawrence Kuhn – September 14, 2017

Host: Why is the mass exodus of Rohingya Muslims from Myanmar continuing. Today on Impact we bring you different perspectives, and one comes from Myanmar's state media which claims the military has China's backing for what it calls an "Anti-Terror Operation." It claims the Chinese ambassador told hig- level officials that the operation should be treated as an internal affair. Let's get insight from Beijing where we're joined by Dr. Robert Lawrence Kuhn, a long-term advisor to the Chinese government and the author of How China's Leaders Think. Robert, thank you for joining us here on impact, and what do you think is the Chinese interest here?

RLK: China's foreign policy is clear historically, but it has been changing under President Xi Jinping. President Xi has a grand vision to create an international community of common destiny, as he calls it, via a new kind of global governance. So, in this situation, what is China's position? Historically, of course, China's cardinal principle has been non-interference across international boundaries. But there's much more here to the story. First of all, China will always skew to supporting the existing government - especially in cases of minority issues because China of course has its own minorities and would not want some new general principle of "responsibility to protect" to be used in an exaggerated way, because it could be applied to China's situation in Xinjiang or elsewhere.

RLK: But there's more complexity with Myanmar because Myanmar an ASEAN country and China has great political interest in ASEAN, particularly in the South China Sea where Vietnam, potentially Indonesia, Philippines (for a time), were all claimants against China, and China needs support in that

They can leave or they can put up with it, no middle ground or perhaps question? RLK: This is a very interesting point and it goes to the party concept of what they call democratic centralism and collective leadership. When Xi was appointed Core about a year ago, which was a very significant move, the party also said it was reaffirming collective leadership. Now that seems on its surface an oxymoron, contradictory, but in the Chinese system it was not, and it's good to understand why.	September 2 Beijing CHINA'S NEW POWER PLAYERS PRESIDENT XI'S THOUGHTS NOW COMMUNIST PARTY DOCTRINE CNN 11:16 PM GMT @HolmesCNN
RLK: Xi has overarching decision making power which he didn't have before he was made 'core'. But he is obligated under the system to respect the system - if he continues to do so, and I certainly expect he will - to really listen to all of the opinions of the senior leaders, certainly the people in the standing committee. And to conduct substantial research, reviews with experts, and polling and iterative kinds of research that they do for all their major documents. So he is obligated to do such serious consultation under the party system. Now can he subvert it the way Mao did? I don't think that's really possible even if he tried and I don't think he will do that. So it's a combination of him now having the absolute power, no question about it, but still respecting party norms of how they go about the research and decision-making process. Apple, Inc.: Addressing The Top 5 Investor Questions

Katy L. Huberty, CFA – Morgan Stanley

May 29, 2019 10:28 PM GMT

Given the risk of further restrictive trade measures, we answer investors' top questions. We expect shares to remain choppy, with a near-term floor around $160. Our estimates are unchanged but peer multiple contraction drives our SoTP-driven PT to $231 (from $240).
What is the latest view on iPhone demand in China? On Apple's April 30th earnings call, CEO Tim Cook noted that the November-December period was likely to be the trough in iPhone demand in China, following an improvement in performance during the March quarter helped by iPhone price cuts, VAT tax rollbacks, increased financing options and better consumer confidence. Data from push-messaging service provider Jigaung shows that the improvement in iPhone demand likely persisted through April, where Apple gained over 175bps of Chinese smartphone installed base share Y/Y (1). However, the increasingly tough trade rhetoric and actions recently taken by US and Chinese authorities make it less likely this trend will continue into May/June. Late last week, following the Huawei blacklist, President Trump commented that "it's possible that Huawei would be included in a trade deal", suggesting recent actions could be bargaining chips to use in trade negotiations that can be worked out by/around the G20 Summit in late June, but with Apple guiding June quarter revenue down 8% Q/Q (vs. trailing 3 year seasonality of -14% Q/Q), the risk remains that weaker near-term demand in China increases the risk of a revenue shortfall. For reference, we model 37M iPhone shipments in the June quarter (-10% Y/Y), in-line with iPhone builds, which implies a 5th consecutive quarter of double digit iPhone shipment declines in China. If we assume Chinese demand significantly weakens in the last 6 weeks of the quarter and iPhone shipments instead fall 50% Y/Y (a 10 point further deceleration from March Q declines), then we'd expect 2.3M lower iPhone units (-6% vs. our current model), $1.6B lower revenue (-2.9%) and a $0.05 hit to EPS (-2

If that's what the Trump administration wants, its strategy has been a great success. If not, and the president really wants a trade deal, with reasonable decreases in the bilateral trade deficit, and some substantive changes in Chinese economic behavior, the American negotiating strategy requires some serious recalibration.

Of course, China's public position is that negotiations can continue. Even within the framework of the new "red lines," there may still be room for a deal. China might agree to purchase more American goods, with America yielding on the retention of tariffs, and the unilateral right to impose tariffs later. However, the degree of difficulty in getting to an agreement has now increased substantially.

The bottom line is that nationalism is not just a factor in Trump's America. It's now a big factor in Xi Jinping's China as well, reinforced through the prism of Chinese history. In most of its dealings with America over the last 100 years, China has seen itself as weak. Today, in Beijing's view, China is weak no longer.

Catching up on some reading and finally read trumps 100 pages of nonsense. Some interesting findings:

1) foundation is inactive
2) ironic that starett city largest federal subsidized housing project which trump had 4 percent interest was finally sold while he is president.

https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.bizjournals.com/newyork/news/2018/05/09/starrett-city-sells-giving-trump-a-profit.amp.html

3) other than doral and post office hotel no substantial income from any of his enties that he showed..

4) 30 pages of stock purchases and sales all 5-15k.

5) cash in his name 25mm or less
6) still has money in revocable trust from his father at jpm 1-5mm
7) claims to have as much as 125mm in trump revocable trust at cap one, professional bank, signature bank and bank United but can be as little as 40mm it mins were real numbers.
Didn't he once say he say he had billions of liquidity..
8) valued planes from 56 to over 86mm. Down from 300mm on earlier disclosures..

9) Bank used for last mortgage on ocean drive purchase is a coral gables bank that is opening in boca as well.

I spoke to my FAA in Orlando, it will take the buyer 6 months to obtain a FAR125 certificate if we do not include ours, Darren and Rich are working on possibility of including JEGE, INC with sale of Boeing, this will be valuable to buyer and prove to be beneficial monetarily to you if we can include the company name in the sale. FAA informs me its taken under into consideration on a case by case basis if they will approve another buyer to operate my FAR125 certificate. My FAA inspector did mention that Trump did the same deal when he purchased his B757, it included the manuals and company.

Unfortunately, bin Sulayem and I did not meet. I was stuck at the White House and he had a narrow window before heading to Cyprus. I just sent him the following note:

"Good Morning, I hope your travels to Cyprus were smooth.

Okey Enelamah, Nigeria's trade minister, stopped by my home this evening as he was still in town after Buhari's visit with Trump. He mentioned his discussions with you at WEF and afterwards. Separately, I spoke earlier with the Vice President.

Whenever we meet, I have some thoughts that may be helpful to you."

The Washington Post

Outlook Perspective

Trump loves a strongman, so of course he fawns over Hungary's Viktor Orban

How Washington pivoted from finger-wagging to appeasement.

By Heather A. Conley and Charles Gati May 25

About the authors ⊕

Two important American visitors showed up in Budapest on Wednesday. One was Stephen K. Bannon, the former White House adviser who is an admirer of Hungary's strongman, Viktor Orban; he addressed a conference on "Europe's Future " organized by Mária Schmidt, an Orban counselor with Bannon-esque ideas about maintaining a Christian culture in Europe. Bannon had called Orban "a man of principles" as well as "a real patriot and a real hero" earlier this year. The two spent an hour together Thursday.

The other visitor was Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs A. Wess Mitchell, the highest-ranking American official responsible for U.S. relations with Hungary. Mitchell came to usher in a new era of accommodation between the Trump administration and the Orban government. This policy dispenses with the traditional foreign policy practice, followed by previous Republican and Democratic administrations, of conveying benefits for cooperative behavior and disapproval for abandoning American interests and values. Instead, this administration believes that offering high-level contacts and withholding criticism will improve an authoritarian regime's behavior. For those who know Hungary's politics, this is appeasement — the victory of hope over centuries of experience.

Orban's odyssey began in 1998 when, during his first term as prime minister, he started to flirt with nationalistic, anti-American and anti-Semitic sentiments to try to win reelection in 2002. When Istvan Csurka, the head of an anti-Semitic party, blamed the United States for the 9/11 attacks (it got what it deserved, he said), the premier declined to dissociate himself from Csurka, despite a White House request to do so. Orban lost his reelection bid and did not return to power until 2010. He has since managed to change the Hungarian constitution five times to reduce judicial independence, restrict press freedoms and modify the electoral system to ensure that no viable opposition could ever form against him and his coalition. He has placed pliant and corrupt loyalists in positions of authority. And he still embraces anti-Semitism as a political tool, praising a Nazi-allied wartime leader of Hungary and using stereotypes to cast Jewish emigre George Soros as an outside puppeteer.

In the past, U.S. administrations kept a certain distance from countries that espoused such policies and attitudes. During Orban's first premiership, for example, President George W. Bush sent the Hungarian leader a hard-hitting, confidential "non-paper" — essentially a list of complaints — that was never answered, so the White House decided not to invite Orban to the Oval Office. The Obama administration denied visas for six Hungarian government officials because of corruption (and it certainly never invited the premier to the White House).

But the hour is late. Orban's vision has gained considerable appeal throughout Europe. In 2014, when he declared the end of the age of liberalism, he was seen as a pariah; today he is the leader of a xenophobic, authoritarian and often anti-American trend that haunts Poland, Austria and Turkey. He has won many converts to the cause of strengthening nation-states and weakening multilateral institutions, notably the European Union. His hostility to migration, particularly what he calls the "Islamic multitude" that "leads to the disintegration of nations," is widely shared. He is admired for having built the first wall in Europe — on the Hungarian-Serbian border — to stem the flow of migrants in 2015. (Paradoxically, Hungary used to be admired for tearing down the barrier between itself and Austria, precipitating the fall of the Berlin Wall.)

It remains as true today as it was in the 1930s that appeasement — the sacrificing of one's principles to avoid confrontation with illiberalism — does not pay. Although we hope the Trump administration will reconsider its flawed strategy, recent events are not promising.

BW: Well, about six people.

Trump: They don't tell me.

BW: A senator. I talked to Kellyanne about it two and a half months ago.

Trump: [?].

BW: She came for lunch.

Trump: Well, it's too bad. Of course, you and I had a conversation a couple of years ago, and so that I think got you there a little bit. And we had a conversation many years ago, if you remember, in Trump Tower.

BW: Yeah, I do.

Trump: That has to be 20 years ago. And you were thinking about doing a book about me then, which is interesting. Who knew it would've been on this subject? Right? That was not in the cards at that time.

BW: That's right. Well, I'm sorry, I . ..

Trump: I still remember that.

BW: I spent a lot of time on this, talked to lots of people.

Trump: All right. Good.

BW: And as you know and are living, we are at a pivot point in history.

Trump: Right.

BW: And I would've liked to have done that, and I maximized my effort, and somehow it didn't get to you, or . ..

Trump: It's really too bad, because nobody told me about it, and I would've loved to have spoken to you. You know I'm very open to you. I think you've always been fair. We'll see what happens. But all I can say is the country is doing very well. We're doing better economically just about than at any time. We're doing better on unemployment maybe than ever. You know, I mean, if you look at the unemployment numbers, you've heard me say it. And we're doing better on unemployment than just about ever. We're having a lot of — a lot of companies are moving back into our country, which would've been unheard of two years ago. If the other administration or representatives of it had kept going, had kept — you know, if the other group had won, I will tell you, that you would have, I think you'd have a GDP of less than zero. I think we would've been going in the wrong direction. Because regulations are such a big part of what we've done, Bob.

BW: Well, I understand that point of view. And as you know, it's also a difficult time where the political system and you and my business is being tested.

Trump: Yeah. Yeah.

BW: I take it very seriously. I've done books on eight presidents, going back from Nixon to Obama.

Trump: Right.

BW: And I learned something about reporting, frankly, Mr. President.

Trump: Good.

BW: I've got to go talk to people and see them outside of the White House and outside of their offices, and gained a lot of insight and documentation. And it's — you know, it's a tough look at the world and your administration and you.

Trump: Right. Well, I assume that means it's going to be a negative book. But you know, I'm some — I'm sort of 50 percent used to that. [Laughter] That's all right. Some are good and some are bad. Sounds like this is going to be a bad one.

BW: It was a chance missed, and I don't know how things work over there in terms of . ..

Trump: Very well. We . ..

BW: . . . getting to you.

Trump: Well, if you would call Madeleine [Westerhout] in my office . . . Did you speak to Madeleine?

BW: No, I didn't. But I . ..

Trump: Madeleine is the key. She's the secret. Because she's the person . ..

BW: Well, I talked to Raj [Shah] about it. I talked to . . . I talked to Kellyanne.

Trump: Well, a lot of them are afraid to come and talk, or — you know, they are busy. I'm busy. But I don't mind talking to you. I would've spoken to you. I spoke to you 20 years [ago] and I spoke to you a year and a half or two years ago.

[Listen to Woodward and Trump's call on The Post's "Can He Do That?" podcast]

BW: A couple of years ago, I understand.

Trump: And I certainly don't mind talking to you, and I wish I could've spoken to you. But nobody called my office. I mean, you went through, I guess, different people. ...

BW: Well, Mr. President, how can I spend all this time talking to people and — like Kellyanne and Raj and Republican senators?

Trump: Who were the senators? No, they never called me about it.

BW: Senator [Lindsey] Graham said he had talked to you about talking to me. Now, is that not true?

Trump: Senator Graham actually mentioned it quickly in one meeting.

BW: Yes. Well, see. And then nothing happened.

BW: Certainly, I understand and I would've loved to go through a discussion with you about NATO, because this goes back to early in your administration and your concern about it, and the agreement that the countries have that they would increase their defense contribution, what is it, by the year 2024? And you know . . . So anyway, we are . ..

Trump: Well, you know last year, if you see the secretary, [Jens] Stoltenberg, he said I believe $44 billion just last year, and that was from last year's meeting. And this year it's much more money they've agreed to put up. So it's a tremendous amount of money. No other president has done it. It was heading down in the opposite direction. So I don't know if you're going to report it that way; probably not. But that's too bad, but that's all right, but you know, one of those things.

BW: Everything is going to be factual. And it is not a good thing for my business, if I may say this to you, Mr. President, to the presidency, or to the country, to not have real, full exchanges on these. And I broke my spear on it trying to get to you.

Trump: Well, other than Lindsey [Graham], who did quickly mention it, nobody mentioned it.

BW: You say Kellyanne's there, ask her.

Trump: Nobody told me about it. Well, let me ask her. Why don't you speak to Kellyanne. Ask her. She never told me about it.

[Conway takes the phone.]

BW: Kellyanne?

Conway: Bob, how are you? Hi.

BW: Hi. Remember two and a half months ago you came over and I laid out, I wanted to talk to the president? And you said you would get back to me?

Conway: I do. And I put in the request. But you know, they — it was rejected. I can only take it so far. I guess I can bring it right to the president next time.

BW: Yeah.

Conway: But I try to follow all the protocols, or else I'm accused of being somebody who doesn't follow protocol.

BW: President Trump, I just want you to know I made every effort.

Conway: But you had talked to [former White House communications director] Hope [Hicks], right, who said no?

BW: Listen, I talked to anyone I could. [Laughs]

Conway: You talked to a number of people and they all said no?

BW: I talked to Raj.

Conway: Raj.

BW: He was going to work it out.

Conway: Hope. [Me?].

[The president says something in the background that is inaudible.]

Conway: I said you tried talking to everybody? What about when you interviewed, like, other people? They all said yes? That they'd try?

BW: Yeah, well, about six or seven people. I tried. And I couldn't have — you and I spent a whole lunch on it, Kellyanne. And I said, I want to cover the substantive issues in foreign policy and domestic policy. And you said you would get back to me. Nothing.

Conway: Yeah. So, I did. I presented it to the people here who make those decisions, but . ..

BW: Who are the people?

Conway: But anyway, I'll give you back to the president. And I'm glad to hear that you tried through seven or eight different people. That's good. You should tell him all the names. [Laughs] Thank you.

Trump: But you never called for me. It would've been nice, Bob, if you called for me, in my office. I mean, I have a secretary. I have two, three secretaries. If you would've called directly — a lot of people are afraid . . . Raj, I hardly have . . . I don't speak to Raj.

BW: Kellyanne is a . ..

Trump: I do, I do, and Kellyanne went to somebody, but she didn't come to me.

BW: Well, does she have access to you?

Trump: And she should've come to me. She does have access to me. Absolutely. She has direct access, but she didn't come to me. And you know what? That's okay. I'll just end up with another bad book. What can I tell you?

BW: It's surprising to me that these people — did Raj have access to you?

Trump: Not really, but he would've been able to do it. But I have an office. You have the office number. I have an office that's directly into my office.

Conway: [inaudible in background]

Trump: It doesn't matter. Let me tell you what matters: The economy is the best it's been in many, many decades. And it's going to get a lot better. And the country is doing very well. That's what's important.

BW: Yes, sir. I thought I would . ..

Trump: We're doing a good job.

BW: . . . never kind of say, let's not talk about this because the book is done to a president . ..

Trump: Yeah, I know.

I spoke to TSA at Palm Bch Atlantic,
Once the President departs Palm Beach area, the TFR (temporary flight restriction) is lifted,
We should be able to land in PBI.,
Currently the TFR expires at 10:30pm,, the superbowl is typically 3 hours long, it starts at 6:30pm,,
Only a guess, Trump will leave around 10pm is my guess.

Trump appears with mobster-affiliated felon at New Year's bash

President-elect Donald Trump rang in the new year together with Joseph "Joey No Socks" Cinque — a convicted felon with ties to notorious Gambino crime family boss John Gotti, a recently released video has revealed.

Cinque can be seen in a video obtained by the Palm Beach Daily News , cheering loudly as a tuxedo-clad Trump runs through a number of campaign promises before the hundreds of guests attending the New Year's Eve bash the President-elect threw at his Mar-a-Lago estate in Florida on Saturday.

"The taxes are coming down, regulations are coming off, we're going to get rid of Obamacare," Trump can be heard saying as an exuberant Cinque stands next to him, pumping his fists into the air.

Cinque's Sunday appearance with Trump might raise some eyebrows.

Beyond a 1989 felony conviction for possessing nearly $100,000 worth of stolen artwork, Cinque "used to be friends with John Gotti," according to a New York Magazine profile from 1995 .

Cinque was also "shot three times and left for dead" in a 1980 incident that authorities described as "a hit," according to the profile.

Further, Saturday's Mar-a-Lago party was far from the first time Cinque cheered on for Trump.

An Associated Press report from this spring showed that the American Academy of Hospitality Sciences, a company owned and operated by Cinque, has awarded more than a dozen of Trump's golf courses, hotels, casinos and private clubs with so-called "Star Diamond" awards "of true excellence in hospitality."

The same report also found that about half of the roughly 30 people listed as "trustees" to the company are Trump friends or business associates.

Trump, meanwhile, was listed on the company's website as its "ambassador extraordinaire," and he even appeared in a 2009 tribute video to Cinque in which he said, "There's nobody like him. He's a special guy."

But when asked by reporters about Cinque in May, Trump denied knowing anything about him or his criminal past.

"If a guy's going to give you an award, you take it," the President-elect said at the time. "You don't tend to look up his whole life story."

The Trump transition team did not immediately return a request for comment on how the President-elect knows Cinque or why they appeared together Saturday.

While standing alongside Cinque, Trump also took a moment to address the terror attack that left scores of nightclub revelers in Istanbul dead over the weekend — and how the bloodbath somehow necessitates a Mexican border wall.

“We will build a wall, you know that. We will build a wall,” the President-elect told the raucous crowd.

Trump: That is true. That is true. Well, that — no, but that is true. Mentioned it quickly, not like, you know, and I would certainly have thought that maybe you would've called the office. But that's okay. I'll speak to Kellyanne. I am a little surprised that she wouldn't have told me. In fact, she just walked in. [to Kellyanne] I'm talking to Bob Woodward. He said that he told you.

Conway: Yes.

Trump: About speaking to me. But you never told me. Why didn't you tell me?

Conway: [inaudible].

Trump: I would've been very happy to speak to him. All right, so what are you going to do?

BW: Well ...

Trump: So I have another bad book coming out. Big deal.

BW: . . . it goes on, and I . . . What you can count on is that I've been very careful. And Evelyn, are you on?

EMD: Yes.

BW: Evelyn Duffy, who's my assistant, Mr. President.

Trump: Hello, Evelyn.

BW: She transcribed all the tapes because, with permission, I taped people for hundreds of hours.

Trump: Good.

BW: And I think there's nothing in this book that doesn't come from a firsthand source. Is that correct, Evelyn?

EMD: I believe that's —

Trump: But are you naming names? Or do you just say sources?

BW: Yeah, well, it names real incidents, so . ..

Trump: No, but do you name sources? I mean, are you naming the people, or just say, people have said?

BW: I say, at 2:00 on this day, the following happened, and everyone who's there, including yourself, is quoted. And I'm sorry I didn't get to ask you about these . ..

Trump: I mean, you do know I'm doing a great job for the country. You do know that NATO now is going to pay billions and billions of dollars more, as an example, than anybody thought possible, that other presidents were unable to get more? And it was heading downward. You do know all of the things I've done and things that I'm doing? I'm in the process of making some of the greatest trade deals ever to be made. You do understand that stuff? I mean, I hope.

BW: . . . and, but that's the position we're in. And it's one I tried to avoid. You need to know I made maximum effort.

Trump: All right. It's too bad.

BW: Yes, sir.

Trump: I'm just hearing about it. And I heard — I did hear from Lindsey, but I'm just hearing about it. So we're going to have a very inaccurate book, and that's too bad. But I don't blame you entirely.

BW: No, it's [?] — it's going to be accurate, I promise.

Trump: Yeah, okay. Well, accurate is that nobody's ever done a better job than I'm doing as president. That I can tell you. So that's . . . And that's the way a lot of people feel that know what's going on, and you'll see that over the years. But a lot of people feel that, Bob.

BW: I believe in our country, and because you're our president, I wish you good luck.

Trump: Okay. Thank you very much, Bob. I appreciate it. Bye.

[Call ends]

[Recording ends]

Aziza

Mr. Weinberg

I was referred to you by Alan Dershowitz, who told me you're Jeffrey Epstein's attorney.

If this is the case, I was hoping to reach him through you to see if he'd be willing to speak on the record about his ties - or previous ties - to both the Clintons and Donald Trump?

Would you be able to arrange a call or email exchange this week?

Thanks for your consideration.

Mr. Weinberg

I was referred to you by Alan Dershowitz, who told me you're Jeffrey Epstein's attorney.

If this is the case, I was hoping to reach him through you to see if he'd be willing to speak on the record about his ties - or previous ties - to both the Clintons and Donald Trump?

Would you be able to arrange a call or email exchange this week?

Thanks for your consideration.

Chart of the Day - Economy and Society

June 27, 2016

Dear Barry,

When it comes to describing Donald Trump's private jet, the word "impressive" would be an understatement. The presumptive Republican Party nominee bought the Boeing 757-200 from Microsoft co-founder Paul Allen and he spared no expense kitting it out. Dubbed "Trump Force One," the luxurious jet is equipped with a shower, gold-plated seatbelt buckles and a 52-inch flatscreen with a library of 1,000 movies. Built in 1991, the 757 is estimated to have cost approximately $100 million. If Trump reaches the White House in November, he'll have to exchange his personal jet for the presidential fleet, two highly modified Boeing 747-200Bs. The aircraft used by the president were built in 1986 and operate with the Air Force One callsign when the president is onboard. Will switching jets prove one of Trump's few regrets if he becomes president?

Even though it cannot boast gold-plated accessories, Air Force One is a larger aircraft, seating 70 passengers in comfort compared to Trump Force One's 43. The presidential jet is also slightly faster with a range of about 6,800 nautical miles compared to 4,100 for a 757. A VC-25A can also be refuelled in mid-air by a tanker, extending its range even further.

The two presidential planes cost $325 million each and their cost of operation comes to $179,750 per hour. The hourly cost of operation for a standard 757 is just over $8,000 by comparison, though the taxpayer will pick up the higher bill for Air Force One. All that bling certainly inflated the cost of Trump Force One but Air Force One is expensive because it's packed with equipment and facilities to keep the president and his or her entourage safe at all times. There is a hospital onboard, electronic countermeasures and heavy shielding to afford protection in the event of an electromagnetic pulse during a nuclear attack. All in all, if Trump does end up travelling regularly on Air Force One, he probably won't regret trading in his gold seatbelt buckle for the presidential suite on one of the most sophisticated airliners in the world.

i think we have divergent views on Trump and trade for obvious reasons the best economists say all-out trade war will cost the WORLD 2-3% of its GDP

this can hardly help the stock market

but the "perturbations" are meat for you—if you can see what to buy and sell ahead of time—or very quickly—in response to the latest tariffs you can beat the system

TIA-CRF can not in good times, it does better than average—here it does distinctly worse—each hit is taken hard, each recovery is feeble—precisely because it does not change its portfolio or only slowly

Transcript: Phone call between President Trump and journalist Bob Woodward

Aaron Blake

President Trump and Bob Woodward discuss Woodward's new book, "Fear," before its publication. (The Washington Post)

Bob Woodward, an associate editor at The Washington Post, sought an interview with President Trump as he was writing "Fear," a book about Trump's presidency. Trump called Woodward in early August, after the manuscript had been completed, to say he wanted to participate.

Over the course of 11-plus minutes, Trump repeatedly claimed his White House staff hadn't informed him of Woodward's interview request — despite also admitting Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) had told him Woodward wanted to talk. He also started the phone call by saying Woodward had "always been fair" to him, but by the end he said the book would be "inaccurate."

This is a transcript of that call, with key sections highlighted and annotated. To see an annotation, click on the yellow, highlighted text.

Trump: Hello, Bob.

BW: President Trump, how are you?

Trump: How are you? How are you doing? Okay?

BW: Real well. I'm turning on my tape recorder, with your permission.

Trump: Oh, that's okay. That's okay. I don't mind that at all.

BW: I'm sorry we missed the opportunity to talk for the book.

Trump: Well, I just spoke with Kellyanne [Conway] and she asked me if I got a call. I never got a call. I never got a message. Who did you ask about speaking to me?

CNN International

Xi Jinping and the New Politburo Standing Committee
Robert Lawrence Kuhn - October 26, 2017

HOST: The author of How China's Leaders Think: The Inside Story of Past, Current and Future Leaders, Robert Lawrence Kuhn is a longtime advisor to the Chinese government. He comes to us once again from Beijing. We talked this time yesterday. Good to have you back. And we discussed yesterday what we would learn about that lineup of the standing committee. It hadn't been revealed at that point that we spoke, but we now know and is it correct to say the most significant thing is no sign of a leader in waiting? RLK: I think the most significant sign is who the people are and how they relate to each other. It's a group that actually respects traditional norms.	CHINA'S NEW POWER PLAYERS PRESIDENT XI'S THOUGHTS NOW COMMUNIST PARTY DOCTRINE LIVE CNN NAS ▼-34.54 @HolmesCNN
RLK: There was thought that Wang Qishan, for example, might violate norms by being on the Standing Committee after the traditional retirement age and that's not the case. There is balance among the member in terms of their geographies, even their political affiliations within the party which internally are important. Two are from Shanghai, two are from the Communist Youth League - one is actually from Shanghai and the Youth League as well but he's really from Shanghai - two have a long relationship with General Secretary Xi. And then of course General Secretary Xi has the overarching power as everyone says - and that is correct and will be correct for a long time to come.	CHINA'S NEW POWER PLAYERS PRESIDENT XI CEMENTS POWER, REVEALS LEADERSHIP TEAM Robert Lawrence Kuhn | Author, "How China's Leaders Think" LIVE CNN NAS ▼-34.54 TODAY

HOST: Absolutely, well certainly but breaking precedent by not having a young leader coming up behind him and we discussed this yesterday. The transfer of Mr. Xi will remain in power for many more years to come, perhaps revive the position of party chairman and stick around indefinitely. RLK: There's no question about the power and longevity of Xi. I would put it a little differently. I'd say that it is not even necessary for him to have the party chairmanship or any particular title because of his overarching power by having his name associated with "Xi Jinping Thought on Socialism with Chinese Characteristics for a New Era" - that whole phrase is now in the Party Constitution. Moreover, he already had the designation of "Core" of the Party.	Wednesday Beijing CHINA'S NEW POWER PLAYERS NO HEIR APPARENT TO CHINESE PRESIDENT XI JINPING LIVE CNN S&P ▼ -11.98 @HolmesCNN
RLK: So those two elements – name in Constitution and Core - are totally overarching over any particular title. That said, not having a younger member of the Standing Committee who is an obvious candidate for future leadership, prevents there being a separate power center that could undermine what Xi wants to do. So the fact that Xi will be there until, potentially, the mid-2030s is very real. I think now we should shift our attention to what Xi Jinping wants to do. We need to look at the policies he is putting forth, and see what they mean for China and for the world. HOST: And I want to touch on that in a moment, but given this power and position afforded to him in the constitution no less, I mean where is room for discussion?	CHINA'S NEW POWER PLAYERS PRESIDENT XI'S THOUGHTS NOW COMMUNIST PARTY DOCTRINE LIVE CNN 11:16 PM GMT @HolmesCNN

<td>RLK: Now this will not mean overt dissent from the media. Certainly, that has been suppressed and will arguably for the foreseeable future continue to be. But in the inner circles, he is obligated to continue to seek guidance and get alternative opinions.

HOST: Speaking of the media you just reminded me of something and we were having a lovely conversation yesterday. I don’t think either of was being particularly rude or anything. And let’s put up the video because you and I were chatting about, just regular Chinese politics and what was happening and this was what happened in our office. We were shut down by the censors in the middle of our conversation. What does that say about how things are going to be run?</td>

<td>RLK: China is extremely sensitive during this particular time of the 19th CPC National Congress. They do that for all national meetings but this is probably the most central time. All elements of media are under strictures. Who knows at what level decisions are made? But even internet connections this week have been terrible because of extreme censorship. I expect that will lessen in the future. But it is endemic of the situation and we will all learn to live with it. As I said, there’s a larger picture here about what Xi is going to do in terms of his people orientation, rejuvenating China, comprehensively deepening reform, and strengthening rule of law.</td>

> If the Patterson book is being published in August, that presents some time frame issues. You would not be able to do a competing book or documentary before then. This is not to say that they shouldn't be pursued. In a sense, better that they know what Patterson's position is and, a year from now say, be able to counter it. I have some thoughts on book and doc to share at your convenience.
> That being said, you do need an immediate counter narrative to the book. I believe Trump offers an ideal opportunity. It's a chance to make the story about something other than you, while, at the same time, letting you frame your own story. Also, becoming an anti-Trump voice gives you a certain political cover which you decidedly don't have now. Still, this necessary involves you going public. And so the most basic decision is about your willingness to do that. My view is that in a couple of weeks you could master message and technical proficiency. I know a bunch of people who could be very helpful here. This would involve something along the lines of you writing an op-ed, doing a high profile television interview (Charlie Rose, I'd say), and perhaps some social media efforts.
> Speaking of which, again, I think a strategic plan, involving your public identity, philanthropic activities and interests, and the development of media allies, ought finally to be put in place. A big, comprehensive, expensive effort.
> The alternative is to continue to keep head down and hope Patterson book is just more he-said she-said and Connolly getting lost in the reeds (which, as an inveterate conspiracist, he always does). My worry is that Patterson can be counted on to produce a bestseller, and while he isn't regarded as a serious writer, he'll surely be unloading a lot of tabloid copy. Because this will be tied to the election, the Trump-Clinton angle will amp up the attention 10-fold, in fact, possibly, a hundred fold. Possibly more than anything you've encountered before.

Jeffrey,
Rumor at the PBI airport is President Trump is due to arrive PBI Monday the 16th and stay until 23rd or 24th.,
This means we can only arrive in PBI from Teterboro after the 16th.

Thx

A few things to think about:

If the Patterson book is being published in August, that presents some time frame issues. You would not be able to do a competing book or documentary before then. This is not to say that they shouldn't be pursued. In a sense, better that they know what Patterson's position is and, a year from now say, be able to counter it. I have some thoughts on book and doc to share at your convenience.

That being said, you do need an immediate counter narrative to the book. I believe Trump offers an ideal opportunity. It's a chance to make the story about something other than you, while, at the same time, letting you frame your own story. Also, becoming an anti-Trump voice gives you a certain political cover which you decidedly don't have now. Still, this necessary involves you going public. And so the most basic decision is about your willingness to do that. My view is that in a couple of weeks you could master message and technical proficiency. I know a bunch of people who could be very helpful here. This would involve something along the lines of you writing an op-ed, doing a high profile television interview (Charlie Rose, I'd say), and perhaps some social media efforts.

Speaking of which, again, I think a strategic plan, involving your public identity, philanthropic activities and interests, and the development of media allies, ought finally to be put in place. A big, comprehensive, expensive effort.

The alternative is to continue to keep head down and hope Patterson book is just more he-said she-said and Connolly getting lost in the reeds (which, as an inveterate conspiracist, he always does). My worry is that Patterson can be counted on to produce a bestseller, and while he isn't regarded as a serious writer, he'll

When PresTrump is visiting MarLago PBI there will be flight restrictions flying in and out of palm beach,, due to location of MarLago,.
There will be GateWay airports you have to depart from in order to land PBI,, Teterboro is a gateway departure airport, requires 24 hour notice just like our DCA program,
When Trump is in MarLago, we will be unable to land in Palm Bch departing from LSJ,, we can land Fort Lauderdale Excutive airport, which isn't bad, they are offering $2.76 fuel price this weekend,,
Same with departure from PBI, need 24 hour notice when President is in town,,
See message from PBI Port:

Important Message: All Palm Beach County Airport Users

We are getting word and expecting a President of the United States (POTUS) visit to PBI / Mar-a-Lago from Feb 3, 2017 (afternoon?) until Feb. 5, 2017. Times to be established.

Expect the FAA's Temporary Flight Restriction paperwork to be posted at least 72 hours prior to the POTUS arrival.

The following two airports are in the inner core, inside 10NM TFR.

PBI Airport; All General Aviation traffic into PBI must clear TSA designated "Gateways" for both arrival and departures into and out of PBI. Departure Gateways - We expect the Gateways to be established at the multiple locations at PBI with TSA operating from 0800-1700 and requires prior reservation (24hrs) with TSA. Arrival Gateways – Expect Ft. Lauderdale International Airport (FLL) and Orlando Int'l (MCO). Also expecting Teterboro, Dulles, and White Plains as additional gateways.

LNA Airport; As initially established by the USSS, the Palm Beach County Park Airport (LNA) in Lantana, FL will be closed to all departures and flight training. Only arrivals into LNA that have gone through the TSA Gateway program at one of the designated airports (FLL/MCO) may fly into LNA during the TFR.

The 30NM outer core will also be in effect and measures will be posted in the FAA NOTAM/TFR release.

Please share this advisory with all aviation users.

maneuver so legally dubious his own lawyers advised him that the Internal Revenue Service would most likely declare it improper if he were audited.

Thanks to this one maneuver, which was later outlawed by Congress, Mr. Trump potentially escaped paying tens of millions of dollars in federal personal income taxes. It is impossible to know for sure because Mr. Trump has declined to release his tax returns, or even a summary of his returns, breaking a practice followed by every Republican and Democratic presidential candidate for more than four decades.

Tax experts who reviewed the newly obtained documents for The New York Times said Mr. Trump's tax avoidance maneuver, conjured from ambiguous provisions of highly technical tax court rulings, clearly pushed the edge of the envelope of what tax laws permitted at the time. "Whatever loophole existed was not 'exploited' here, but stretched beyond any recognition," said Steven M. Rosenthal, a senior fellow at the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center who helped draft tax legislation in the early 1990s.

Mr. Trump managed to save millions in personal taxes by borrowing – then losing – other people's money.

Moreover, the tax experts said the maneuver trampled a core tenet of American tax policy by conferring enormous tax benefits on Mr. Trump for losing vast amounts of other people's money — in this case, money investors and banks had entrusted to him to build a casino empire in Atlantic City.

ECONOMICS: US PERSPECTIVES

NATIONAL DEFENSE: IS ANOTHER SPENDING BOOM ON THE HORIZON?

+ Joseph G. Carson, US Economist and Director—Global Economic Research, joe.carson@abglobal.com

President Trump has promised to increase defense spending—and there's support from key members of Congress. If a large multiyear plan is approved, it would represent a sharp reversal from what has been the weakest trend in defense spending in the past 50 years. And the timing and scale would have important implications for the outlook on growth and inflation.

National Defense—The Trump Plan

President Trump has promised to deliver an ambitious program to rebuild the US military. It would include modernizing US nuclear weapons systems, investing more in cybersecurity, enlarging the navy's fleet and increasing the number of fighter aircraft for the air force. Trump's plan also includes additional military personnel—well over 100,000, according to some estimates.

The details of Trump's first Pentagon budget will form part of the overall budget he'll submit to Congress in late February or early March. The actual funding request for the current fiscal year (which ends September 30) must be completed by April 30—that's when the current legislation funding the military budget is set to expire.

More important, Trump's blueprint for the Pentagon budget could set the baseline for defense spending for at least the next four years. It's also worth noting that Trump's military expenditures could be at the low end of what some in Congress are proposing.

For example, Senator John McCain, who chairs the Senate Armed Services Committee, recently released a white paper on defense spending, Restoring American Power. McCain argues that the US has underinvested in the military for several years, and that it is now vital for the US to substantially increase funding for the Pentagon. His plan calls for a $640 billion defense budget for fiscal year 2018, which is $58 billion above the current budget baseline. Moreover, the McCain defense plan urges an additional $430 billion in military spending over the next five fiscal years.

Defense Spending Patterns Are Unlike Other Federal Programs

History shows that defense spending programs are unusual in that they're neither cyclical nor countercyclical. Most often they are based on military and political strategies as well as ongoing readiness to respond to or engage in global encounters.

Based on historical gross domestic product (GDP) data, there have been three large defense-spending programs in the past 50 years (Display 1). The first buildup occurred in the mid-1960s, during President Lyndon Johnson's term, and ran for five years. That was tied to the military engagement in Southeast Asia.

The second large defense-spending boom occurred during the first four years of the Reagan presidency. This buildup was part of Reagan's political and military strategy to rebuild the military apparatus after what he saw as years of neglect.

The third major increase started during the first term of President George W. Bush. This one was linked to events surrounding 9/11 and the following events in the Middle East.

I've contact Universal ref Cuba trip:
Attached is current form they are utilizing,.
See note from UVAir below:

Hello Larry,
This year we have had quite a few successful Cuba trips with clients over the past year or so that Cuba travel has resumed. Attached are the rules and regulations that we currently operate under.
Keep in mind on 16 Jun 2017, President Donald Trump has announced changes that are to come regarding Cuban and US relations. This means the regulations are being rewritten to reflect these changes and are to be published 30-90 days from that date. We do not have advance notice on how the regulations will be written or exactly how it will affect our Cuba licensing but we are sure they will have some impact on us.

Until further notice we are still utilizing the attached information. I will keep an eye out for updates on Cuba restrictions; however, we should start the process as we have in the past.

We will need the following documents form you:
1. In the attached document on page number 10 there is a "Cubia BIS Certification Form" We will need this filled out by the PIC for the trip. This is a self-authorization form for the aircraft and should be kept on file after the trip in case the Department of Treasury asks for it in the future.
2. We will also need the "Passenger Certification" form for each passenger on board. They will need to advise purpose of travel under section 1. If they do not fall under any of those then they will need a specific license from the Department of Treasury.

After we receive the above documents for the aircraft and passengers we can start arranging handing and landing permits for the trip.

area. In addition, Myanmar is in a critical geographic position for China's economic concerns. President Xi has the Belt and Road Initiative, this far reaching strategy to build infrastructure across Asia and into Africa and even Eastern Europe. And Myanmar plays a critical position potentially for an oil or energy pipeline that would allow China to get resources from the Middle East and avoid the bottleneck in the Straits of Malacca. For all of these reasons, China would support the Myanmar government.

Host: Robert, is China's support strengthened by opposition from Washington where President Trump's administration is calling for Rohingya refugees to return to safe zones?

RLK: I don't think that's a big motivation for China. Far more important are local geopolitics, the Belt and Road Initiative, the potential energy pipeline. I don't think China considers opposing Washington a major motivator for their strategy. U.S. comments seem normal for these situations, but are fairly ineffectual – look at Crimea or other places in the world where similar situations have occurred.

RLK: Refugee crises are great tragedies for the world and it seems like we have more of them. There's more of a desire for individual groups of people to assert their own independence. We see it in the Kurds, South Sudan, many places in the world. Perhaps it's our interconnected world of 24-hour-a-day internet, which allows similar people to congregate together and take up their own personal interests. So it's a very complex situation. China is dealing with it - for the reasons I said - for what it believes to be in its own interests.

Host: Robert Lawrence Kuhn, thank you very much for joining us from Beijing. We appreciate your insights.

In a lawyer's letter, I'd suggest including the following points--not necessarily legal, but a warning about how a press campaign might unfold (publishers are more worried about being caught in negative media controversy than they are of legal threats):

1) Little, Brown has made on the record representations to at least one well-known journalist that it was not publishing a book by James Patterson about Jeffrey Epstein--possibly an effort to avoid inquiries about the questionable nature of the book;

2) The actual author of the book, John Connolly, is someone other than the stated author, James Patterson. Connolly is known to have developed an obsession with Epstein, such that, his longtime employer, Vanity Fair, has refused to allow him to write about Epstein for the magazine;

3) Sources have confirmed for us that Patterson has had little more than a minimal consulting role in the book, and that Connolly has functioned in every material way as the book's researcher and writer. We believe Patterson's "authorship" of the book will not stand up to scrutiny. And, indeed, that the entire notion of an extension of the Patterson franchise into nonfiction, as it has been used in fiction and children's book--effectively other authors writing under the Patterson name—presents a host of journalism ethical issues.

The obituary of unique comedian Irwin Corey stated, "Over a career that spanned more than 70 years, Corey performed in vaudeville, radio, television, films, Broadway, nightclubs and Las Vegas showrooms."

In 1983, I was fortunate to be booked as the opening act for Corey in a four-day run at the Julia Morgan Theater in Berkeley. He revealed his dark side in a room backstage, where we smoked a joint, and he told me how he used to read Nazi hate literature to get him in the mood to perform. And there was a certain sense of continuity on his deathbed. The night before he died, he said to a close friend, James Drougas, "Trump will be assassinated soon."

"Professor" Corey also had a humanitarian streak. In 1996, in my magazine, The Realist, I published a photo of him, from a video by his son Richard, presenting Fidel Castro a bag of California-grown pistachio nuts (Castro said, "California, hmmmm, good climate there for nuts"), a book on the Rosenberg controversy, and a credit-card-size calculator (Castro said, "I'll have to use my little pinky to push the buttons"). Dave Channon reported thatCorey was on a diplomatic mission to lift the embargo on health supplies to Cuba, and he visited a hospital that was providing sophisticated treatment for the survivors of Chernobyl. Cuban health care provided for more radiation victims than than did the U..S."

I am writing a story about how markets keep ripping ahead despite political craziness. VIX so low, etc. You must get a lot of this in talking to clients -- people freaking out about headlines as markets hit new highs. How do you spin this to them? One hedgie Trump supporter told me that Trump is the highest beta prez ever -- ie the highs will be high but so will be the lows.

Question: how closely does DJT track market moves? I know he tweets about Dow 20,000 but how aware do you think he is about how market really betting big on him. Does he talk to Barrack about this? Cohn?

re your comment on predicting Trump, there is HL Mencken's famous phrase:

"It is IMPOSSIBLE to underestimate the intelligence of the American people."

and then from Richard Hofstadter's 1964 book on Ant-intellectualism in American Life:

"There is a cult of ignorance in the United States, and there has always been. The strain of anti-intellectualism has been a constant thread winding its way through our political and cultural life, nurtured by the false notion that democracy means that my ignorance is just as good as your knowledge."

Only thing stupefying me about Trump so far is that all his EPA appointees come from the great wasteland called Oklahoma—Inhofe et al, climate change deniers to the last, but climate change is inescapable and by going back to our old way of doing things, it will merely come all the quicker

Pres. Trump arrives PBI Friday at 6pm is TFR is effective,. If we land before 6pm we are ok.
Newark is not a gateway airport to PBI, only Teterboro,,
If you want to arrive in PBI after 6pm,. I can relocate the GIV to Teterboro,

What time do you estimate wheels up Friday from Newark? Or should I move plane to Teterboro Friday afternoon?

I'm against censorship, and that includes Kathy Griffin. CNN eats chickenshit. What she did is nothing compared to Trump's murderous evil.

P.S. THIS LITERALLY REEKS WITH IRONY…THIS IS WHERE CNN GETS ITS CHICKENSHIT. A COMMERCIAL THAT THEY'RE LOSING BECAUSE OF KATHY:

SQUATTY POTTY - KATHY GRIFFIN "FULL OF SHIT" (2017) (USA)

09 May, 2017 By Dabitch 0 Comments

Second week of May this Kathy Griffin ad rolls out digital media only, where Kathy tells people that they are "full of shit." Literally. See, Kathy Griffin has a potty mouth but also a selling point - the reason you'd use the squatty potty is to properly empty your bowels. "It's like a colonic" she explains, but without that hose up your ass. A cute blue turd bleeps her potty mouth but the point is still made.
You may remember Squatty Potty's pooping unicorn video created by the Harmon Brothers in 2015. Now Kathy Griffin is their first celebrity spokesperson. The brand's CEO and co-creator, Bobby Edwards, finds her quirky, brave and fearless, which makes her a good ambassador for the brand as they target women with this campaign. Edwards says the brand team fell in love with the "full of shit" idea from Bravery Films, "it got the biggest laughs" from staff. Howie Ronay, Bravery Films' founder and chief creative officer, a former FCB exec who worked on the 2013 viral hit "Ship My Pants" for Kmart explains: "We know a lot of people struggle with this issue, and we decided to take a common colloquial phrase and use it literally." Basically, this is "ship my pants II." Enough about poop, not all ads can be great.

WASHINGTON: US President Donald Trump held the first meeting of his full Cabinet today, vowing to take the fight against terrorism to the very end and said "we are going to starve the beast" by stopping its funding.

"One of the big things that we did - and you're seeing it now with Qatar and all of the things that are actually going on in a very positive fashion - we are stopping the funding of terrorism," Trump told reporters at the White House.

Dear Jeffrey:

Trust all is well. We are in full pre-production of our "Radical Breakthroughs" series/season for Closer To Truth. We expect to have a complete production plan, with contributors, locations and schedule, by mid/late November - when (coincidentally) I will be back in NY.

My next email will add detail, including first (rough) outlines of the first two episodes. I'll be copying the producer/director of Closer To Truth, as I will from now on with all reports/communications related to the content of the series. Whenever we want to communicate privately, about the series/grant or anything else, please use a separate email (or respond to this one).

I am in Santa Monica for two weeks, then Beijing for the big Party Congress. I may need to stay until after Trump's (supposed) visit. Attached are my two recent BBC commentaries on China (N.Korea bomb and Myanmar refugees).

Always available to Skype.

I am truly excited about the series - nothing like it, could have impact - and I deeply appreciate your generosity/support, confidence and trust.

Take care and warm regards,

Robert

What kinds of media goals/story ideas are interesting to you? Masha has made it clear that she wants me to write something about you, but that's much more your call to make. I suggest that there is mileage to be gained by quoting you in a story about how proper implementation of cryptocurrency might solve financial corruption issues.

I travel back to Austin, Texas tomorrow evening, but am of course reachable. Thanks again for your time this morning.

That's going against virtue itself. What I'd like to do is game out everything, creating a structure for thinking this through. Definitely not a piecemeal response. Figure out where we want to be and where we can reasonably get and work backwards. Maybe we do agree to a big interview with you--Landon Thomas or something like that. But this has to be war gamed out. Obviously I can contribute, Kathy can, would be great to get SB input, but this needs a structure, that's why I think Hiltzig or somebody assembling a plan would be helpful. Even if in the end you decide to do nothing, at least you've come up with a structured way to think about it.

Im not angry , sorry, it is sad. it is apparent that you have no experience trading. we both made a mistake. . the spy trades were the results of a rank amatuer. . you took a postion on the direction of the market. ok. you decided to play it extra short time and short. . why? becaue the options are cheaper. ? knowing full well that time premium was running. . first silly move. . I allowed as promised to give you authority. . you set a target. . it hit the traget , you moved in back. based on media reporting on trump visit? you didnt act. the market dipped and you panicked. . AMATEUR . wrong options wrong timing , no discipline and as a percentaage of investment. a one day dip fof 25%. wanting to buy the highter strike , is ok. but why the same month? why the same moment. why the same index. . sorry. I have taught this for many years. and your grade is an F. not one good move in many. . re broadcom. the crack happend in the morning. options were higher. no alternative presented. no analysis. , this is no way to manage money. I have lost a great deal of money hoping you would be able to do as you promised you could . would. . Had you told me , jeffrey I d like to try a new job as a manager lets start slow I can learn . i would be less annoyed. you told me you had great confidence knew the risks and truly believed you would be able to raise money .do well and prosper. . If it were not you, this would have ended months ago. . we should work on a solution . not sure yet what shape it takes.

Subject: Responding to yesterday's election
To: [redacted]

Dear Packer Families,

Like many of you, I am writing this message on very little sleep. Last night was like no other in our political memory, defying the predictions of the most erudite pundits and political prognosticators.

Today, we are spending a great deal of time unpacking the election results with our students across the three divisions — during morning meeting and throughout the day in Lower School classrooms, in Middle School advisories, during Upper School Community time, as well as in many individual classroom conversations. I write to assure you that we will do our best to handle these discussions with balance, sensitivity, and fairness.

Given that last week's mock election among Packer's Upper School students showed that over 80% favored Secretary Clinton, I don't think it's a huge leap to assume that there was more disappointment than joy in Packer households as results unfolded last night. At the same time, there are certainly Packer families who support Mr. Trump and are pleased with this outcome. As a school community, we have an obligation to recognize that there will be a broad array of feelings generated by the election results, and it is our responsibility as a school to make space for these feelings to be expressed thoughtfully and compassionately, as well as to model the tolerance and acceptance of difference that are among our core values. No doubt, we have our work cut out for us, but I am confident in the good that we can do as a community.

There are abundant lessons to be learned from this election: that experts can be wrong; that our country is even more deeply divided than many of us had thought; and that abundant numbers of our fellow Americans feel a deep sense of despair and disaffection with the status quo of government. For us here at school, we will use this as an opportunity to talk with your children in age-appropriate ways about demographics, the economy, social policy, our democratic system, and the rule of law. We will also talk about the world's response to yesterday's election results, our individual responsibilities as citizens to continue to give voice to our beliefs, and appropriate channels of political activism. On a more basic level, we will stress the importance of not being a gloating winner or a sore loser, and about the strength of our nation, its history of responding to dramatic political change, and the hopefulness of the future.

As for you, our families, I offer two resources. Last week at a NYSAIS heads-of-school conference that I attended, the University of Pennsylvania educator Ali Michael spoke about advancing our national dialogue about race. This morning Dr. Michael wrote a Huffington Post piece, "What Do We Tell the Children?", a moving yet direct reminder of how we, as adults, can model our responses for the young people around us. Next Wednesday, November 16, from 6:30 to 8 p.m., Semeka Smith-Williams and the PA Diversity Committee are holding a "Post-Election Healing" evening here at Packer.

Please reach out if you have questions, suggestions, or simply would like to share your thoughts, and take good care.

Best regards.

Bruce L. Dennis

Not an interview - we will each question each other.

We're playing in new territory here. There may be some contributions we can make… To be discussed privately. I return to Los Angeles on Nov. 17, but dont get to NY until Dec. 24, after my next trip to Beijing.

Dear Lesley,

HORRORS!

I have committed the (to me) unpardonable error of inflicting upon Jeffrie -- today on the phone - a false anagram. Please spare him the pain of passing it on in its erroneous form.
Here is the correct version:

The letters in PRESIDENT TRUMP -- re-arranged -- spell: MR. PUTIN'S RED PET.

Thanks, Lesley. The chicken matter touches my heart. Dick C.

“And speaking of walls,” he continued. “In Turkey tonight — has anybody heard? Big disaster took place in Turkey tonight. Many, many, many people killed…It’s a horror show. So we’re going to get things running properly.”

ISIS claimed responsibility for the Saturday attack , which left at least 39 people dead and dozens more wounded, calling the lone gunman who carried out the massacre a “heroic soldier of the caliphate.” The suspect had yet to be named and located by Turkish authorities early Tuesday.

The President-elect made building a wall along the country’s southern border one of his main campaign talking points, frequently promising his supporters that it will be a “great” and “beautiful” wall .

But his pledge to construct a border barrier has gone under several renditions, with the President-elect admitting in November that it might actually end up “part wall, part fence.”

director of the Palm Beach County Education Commission touted the area's benefits. I surveyed real estate and office space surrounded by miles of water without once having my foot stepped on by a tourist. You can see how all this might sway someone who's on the fence.

Exploring the sugary beaches of South Florida, one starts to wonder why Wall Streeters would be on the fence at all. Between the smiling locals and the shopping on Worth Avenue, the Hiaasen-esque stereotypes recede. What remains are the facts: Take-home pay is higher, commutes are shorter, and it's just as fabulous as Manhattan, at least for four months of the year. Meanwhile, no one in Florida even owns an ice scraper. With the Internet allowing more and more money managers to perform their work from nearly anywhere, there are few reasons not to make the move.

"Initially, it was a way to play golf and keep the wife and kids happy," says Brett Langbert, managing director and head of sales at I.A. Englander & Co. "But once we moved down, it became a quality-of-life issue. There are unlimited things the kids can do outside. I have to tell you, my wife and I are so happy we haven't had to go to one of those indoor bouncy-castle places since we got here."

We have processed 943,338 tweets since the start of the presidential debate till now.

Clinton's popularity has increased dramatically since the debate. According to our recent data, 62% support Clinton and 38% Trump.

Clinton is now more popular in New York, California and Michigan. She is likely to win in these states with huge margins. Clinton has also gained popularity in Texas (Clinton 65% - Trump 35%).

Trump has huge support in Ohio (90% Trump - 10% Clinton) and in New Jersey.

read the times interview. I would think about pointing to the stormy daniels. denial by trump his staff and aides. would it have made sense to go back to them? no would they admit no did they admit no , did they obfuscate yes. did they deny , yes so checking with the subject when you have to goods only confuses the reader ?
